We,

QUA

We, who are hearers, may be allowed some opportunities in the quality of standers-by.

8. Comparative or relative rank.

It is with the clergy, if their persons be respected, even as it is with other men; their quality many times far beneath that which the dignity of their place requireth.

We lived most joyful, obtaining acquaintance with many of the city, not of the meanest quality.

The masters of these horses may be admitted to dine with the lord lieutenant: this is to be done, what quality soever the persons are of.

9. Rank; superiority of birth or station.

Let him be so entertained, as suits with gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality.

10. Persons of high rank. Collectively.

I shall appear at the masquerade dressed up in my feathers, that the quality may see how pretty they will look in their travelling habits.

Of all the servile herd, the worst is he,

That in proud dullness joins with quality,

A constant critic at the great man's board,

To fetch and carry nonsense for my lord.

QUALM. n. f. [cpealm, Saxon, a sudden stroke of death.] A sudden fit of sickness; a sudden seizure of sickly languor.

Some sudden qualm hath struck me to the heart,

And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

Some distill'd carduus benedictus, laid to your heart, is the only thing for a qualm.

Compar'd to these storms, death is but a qualm,

Hell somewhat lightome, the Bermudas calm.

I find a cold qualm come over my heart, that I faint, I can speak no longer.

All maladies

Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms

Of heart-sick agony.

For who, without a qualm, hath ever look'd

On holy garbages, though by Homer cook'd.

They have a sickly uneasiness upon them, shifting and changing from one error, and from one qualm to another, hankering after novelties.

Thy mother well deserves that short delight,

The nauous qualms of ten months and travail to requite.

When he hath stretch'd his vessels with wine to their utmost capacity, and is grown weary and sick, and feels those qualms and disturbances that usually attend such excesses, he resolves, that he will hereafter contain himself within the bounds of sobriety.

The qualms or ruptures of your blood

Rise in proportion to your food.

QUA'LMISH. adj. [from qualm.] Seized with sickly languor.

I am qua'mish at the smell of leek.

You drop into the place,

Careless and qua'mish with a yawning face.

QUA'DARY. n. f. [qu'en dirai je, Fr. Skimmer.] A doubt; a difficulty; an uncertainty. A low word.

QUA'NTITY. adj. [quantitativus, Lat.] Estimable according to quantity.

This explication of rarity and density, by the composition of substance with quantity, may peradventure give little satisfaction to such who are apt to conceive therein no other composition or resolution, but such as our senses shew us, in compounding and dividing bodies according to quantitative parts.

QUA'NTITY. n. f. [quantitas, Fr. quantitas, Lat.]

1. That property of any thing which may be increased or diminished.

Quantity is what may be increased or diminished.

2. Any indeterminate weight or measure.

Unkill'd in hellebore, if thou shou'dst try

To mix it, and mistake the quantity,

The rules of physick wou'd against thee cry.

3. Bulk or weight.

QUA

to expose your parts in a city congregation.

QUARREL. n. f. [quarrel, Fr.]

1. A brawl; a petty fight; a scuffle.

If I can fasten but one cup upon him,

With that which he hath drank to-night already,

He'll be as full of quarrel and offence,

As my young mistress' dog.

2. A dispute; a contest.

The part, which in this present quarrel striveth against the current and stream of laws, was a long while nothing feared.

As if earth too narrow were for fate,

On open seas their quarrels they debate;

In hollow wood they floating armies bear,

And forc'd imprison'd winds to bring 'em near.

3. A cause of debate.

I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

If not in service of our God we fought,

In meaner quarrel of this sword were shaken,

Well might thou gather in the gentle thought,

So fair a princess should not be forsaken.

4. Something that gives a right to mischief or reprisal.

He thought he had a good quarrel to attack him.

Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will.

5. Objection; ill will.

Herodias had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him, but she could not.

We are apt to pick quarrels with the world for every little foolery.

I have no quarrel to the practice; it may be a diverting way.

6. In Shakespeare, it seems to signify any one peevish or malicious.

Better

She ne'er had known pomp, though't be temporal;

Yet if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce

It from the bearer, 'tis a suff'rance panging

As foul and body's ferv'ring.

7. [From quadraus, Fr. quadrella, Italian.] An arrow with a square head.

It is reported by William Brito, that the arcubalista or archer was first shewed to the French by our king Richard I. who was shortly after slain by a quarrel thereof.

Twang'd the string, outflaw the quarrel long.

QUARREL. v. n. [quarreller, Fr.]

1. To debate; to scuffle; to squabble.

I love the sport well, but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man.

Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling

Upon the head of valour.

Wine drunken with excess, maketh bitterness of the mind, with brawling and quarrelling.

Beasts called sociable, quarrel in hunger and lust; and the bull and ram appear then as much in fury and war, as the lion and the bear.

2. To fall into variance.

Our discontented counties do revolt;

Our people quarrel with obedience.

3. To fight; to combat.

When once the Persian king was put to flight,

The weary Macedons refus'd to fight;

Themselves their own mortality confess'd,

And left the son of Jove to quarrel for the rest.

4. To admit the thing, and quarrel about the name, is to make ourselves ridiculous.

They find out miscarriages wherever they are, and forge them often where they are not; they quarrel first with the officers, and then with the prince and state.

In a poem elegantly writ,

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake.

I quarrel not with the word, because used by Ovid.

QUARRELLER. n. f. [from quarrel.] He who quarrels.

QUARRELOUS. adj. [quarrellous, Fr.] Petulant; easily provoked to enmity; quarrelsome.

Ready in gybes, quick answered, saucy, and

As quarrelous as the weazel.

QUARRELSOME. adj. [from quarrel.] Inclined to brawls; easily irritated; irascible; choleric; petulant.

Choleric and quarrelsome persons will engage one into their quarrels.

There needs no more to the setting of the whole world in a flame, than a quarrelsome plaintiff and defendant.

QUARRELSOMELY. adv. [from quarrelsome.] In a quarrelsome manner; petulantly; cholericly.

QUARRELSOMENESS.

QUA

QUARRELSOMENESS. n. f. [from quarrelsome.] Cholericness; petulance.

QUARRY. n. f. [quarry, Fr.]

1. A square.

To take down a quarry of glass to scowre, fodder, band, and to set it up again, is three halfpence a foot.

2. [Quadrans, Fr.] An arrow with a square head.

The shafts and quarries from their engines fly

As thick as falling drops in April show'rs.

3. [From quarry, to seek, Fr. Skinner; from carry, Koinet.] Game flown at by a hawk.

Your wife and babes

Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,

Were on the quarry of these murder'd deer

To add the death of you.

She dwells among the rocks, on every side

With broken mountains strongly fortify'd;

From thence whatever can be seen surveys,

And stooping, on the slaughter'd quarry peers,

So scented the grim feature, and up turn'd

His nostrils wide into the murky air,

Sagacious of his quarry.

They heard their guns discharge;

This heave some ships of ours, though out of view,

And swift as eagles to the quarry flew.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,

In firmament waters dipt above,

Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,

And hoods the flames that to their quarry flowe.

No toil, no hardship can restrain

Ambitious man inur'd to pain;

The more confin'd, the more he tries,

And at forbidden quarry flies.

Ere now the god his arrows had not try'd,

But on the trembling deer or mountain goat,

At this new quarry he prepares to shoot.

Let reason then at her own quarry fly,

But how can finite grasp infinity.

4. [Quarriere, quarrel, Fr. from carrig, Irish, a stone, Mr. Lye's cralg, Erse, a rock.] A stone mine; a place where they dig stones.

The same is said of stone out of the quarry, to make it more durable.

Pyramids and tow'rs

From diamond quarries hevin, and rocks of gold.

Here though grief my feeble hands up lock,

Yet on the loiter'd quarry would I score

My plaining verse as lively as before.

An hard and unrelenting foe,

As the new-crufted Niobe;

Or, what doth more of statue carry,

A nun of the Platonic quarry.

He like Amphion makes those quarries leap

Into fair figures from a confus'd heap.

Could necessity infallibly produce quarries of stone, which are the materials of all magnificent structures.

For them alone the heav'n's had kindly heat

In eastern quarries, hisping precious dew.

As long as the next coal-pit quarry or chalk-pit will give abundant attestation to what I write, to these I may very safely appeal.

QUARRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To prey upon. A low word not in use.

With cares and horrors at his heart, like the vulture that is day and night quarrying upon Prometheus's liver.

QUARRYMAN. n. f. [quarry and man.] One who digs in a quarry.

One rhomboidal bony scale of the needle-fish, out of Stunsfield quarry, the quarryman assured me was flat, covered over with scales, and three foot long.

QUART. n. f. [quart, Fr.]

1. The fourth part; a quarter. Not in use.

Albanact had all the northern part,

Which of himself Albania he did call,

And Camber did possess the western quart.

2. The fourth part of a gallon.

I have been dry, and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart pot to drink in.

You have made an order, that ale should be sold at three halfpence a quart.

3. [Quarte, Fr.] The vessel in which strong drink is commonly retailed.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,

And say you would present her at the leet,

Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts.

QUARTAN. n. f. [febris quartana, Lat.] The fourth day ague.

It were an uncomfortable receipt for a quartan ague, to lay the fourth book of Homer's Iliads under one's head.

Call her the metaphysics of her sex,

And say the tortures wits, as quartans vex

Physicians.

Among these, quartans and tertians of a long continuance most menace this symptom.

QUARTATION. n. f. [from quartus, Lat.] A chymical operation.

In quartation, which refiners employ to purify gold, although three parts of silver be so exquisitely mingled by fusion with a fourth part of gold, whence the operation is denominated, that the resulting mass acquires several new qualities; yet, if you cast this mixture into aqua fortis, the silver will be dissolved in the menstruum, and the gold like a dark powder will fall to the bottom.

QUARTER. n. f. [quart, quartier, Fr.]

1. A fourth part.

It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile.

Observe what stars arise or disappear,

And the four quarters of the rolling year.

Supposing only three millions to be paid, 'tis evident that to do this out of commodities, they must, to the consumer, be raised a quarter in their price; so that every thing, to him that uses it, must be a quarter dearer.

2. A region of the skies, as referred to the seaman's card.

I'll give thee a wind.

I myself have all the other,

And the very points they blow,

And all the quarters that they know

I th' shipman's card.

His praise, ye winds! that from four quarters blow,

Breathe soft or loud.

When the winds in southern quarters rise,

Ships, from their anchors torn, become their sport,

And sudden tempests rage within the port.

3. A particular region of a town or country.

The like is to be said of the populousness of their coasts and quarters there.

No heaven shall be seen in thy quarters.

The sons of the church being so much dispersed, though without being driven, into all quarters of the land, there was some extraordinary design of divine wisdom in it.

A bungling cobbler, that was ready to starve at his own trade, changes his quarter, and sets up for a doctor.

4. The place where soldiers are lodged or stationed.

Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?

—Unless I have mista'en his quarters much,

His regiment lies half a mile

South from the mighty power of the king.

The quarters of the sev'ral chiefs they shew'd,

Here Phenix, here Achilles made abode.

It was high time to shift my quarters.

5. Proper station.

They do best, who, if they cannot but admit love, yet make it keep quarter, and sever it wholly from their serious affairs.

Swift to their several quarters halted then

The cumbrous elements.

6. Remission of life; mercy granted by a conqueror.

He magnified his own clemency, now they were at his mercy, to offer them quarter for their lives, if they gave up the cattle.

When the cocks and lambs lie at the mercy of cats and wolves, they must never expect better quarter.

Discover the opinion of your enemies, which is commonly the truest; for they will give you no quarter, and allow nothing to complaisance.

7. Treatment shown by an enemy.

To the young if you give any tolerable quarter, you indulge them in their idleness, and ruin them.

QUE

- QUATERCOUSINS. As, they are not quater-cousins, as it is commonly spoken cater-cousins, plus ne jont pas de quater cousins, they are not of the four first degrees of kindred, that is, they are not friends. Skinner.*
- QUATERNARY. n. f.* [quaternarius, Lat.] The number four.
The objections against the quaternary of elements and ter-nary of principles, needed not to be opposed so much against the doctrines themselves. Boyle.
- QUATERNION. n. f.* [quaternio, Lat.] The number four.
Air and the elements! the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change Vary to our great maker still new praise. Milto.
I have not in this scheme of these nine quaternions of constants, distinct known characters, whereby to express them, but must repeat the same. Helder's Elements of Speech.
- QUATERNITY. n. f.* [quaternitas, Lat.] The number four.
The number of four stands much admired, not only in the quaternity of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God. Brown.
- QUATRIN. n. f.* [quatrain, Fr.] A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately: as,
Say, Stella, what is love? whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?
What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Didst thou to light the mischief-making boy. Mr. Muffs.
I have writ my poem in quatrains or stanza's of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judged them of greater dignity for the found and number, than any other verse in use. Dryden.
- To QUAVER. v. n. [cpavan, Saxon.]
1. To shake the voice; to speak or sing with a tremulous voice.
Miso sitting on the ground with her knees up, and her hands upon her knees tuning her voice with many a quavering cough, thus discoursed. Sidney, b. ii.
The division and quavering, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Now sportive youth
Carol incoherent rhythms with fainting notes, Philips.
And quaver unharmonious.
We shall hear her quavering them half a minute after us, to some sprightly airs of the opera. Addison.
2. To tremble; to vibrate.
A membrane, stretched like the head of a drum, is to receive the impulse of the sound, and to vibrate or quaver according to its reciprocal motions. Ray on the Creation.
If the eye and the finger remain quiet, these colours vanish in a second minute of time, but if the finger be moved with a quavering motion, they appear again. Newton's Opticks.
- QUAY. n. f.* [quai, Fr.] A key; an artificial bank to the sea or river, on which goods are conveniently unladen.
- QUEAN. n. f.* [cpaan, Saxon, a barren cow; poepgen, in the laws of Canute, a strumpet.] A worthless woman, generally a strumpet.
As fit as the nail to his hole, or as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave. Shakefp.
This well they understand like cunning queans,
And hide their naftiness behind the scenes. Dryden.
Such is that sprinkling, which some careless quean Flirts on you from her mop. Swift.

- QUEASY. adj.* [of uncertain etymology.]
1. Sick with nausea.
He, queasy with his insolence already,
Will their good thoughts call from him. Shakefp.
Whether a rotten state and hope of gain,
Or to dislute me from the queasy pain
Of being belov'd and loving,
Out-push me first. Donne.
2. Fastidious; squeamish.
I, with your two helps, will to practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. Shakefp.
The humility of Gregory the great would not admit the stile of bishop, but the ambition of Boniface made no scruple thereof, nor have queasy resolutions been harboured in their successors ever since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Men's stomachs are generally so queasy in these cases, that it is not safe to overload them. Government of the Tongue.
Without question,
Their conscience was too queasy of digestion. Dryden.

He was lapt
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
2. A woman who is sovereign of a kingdom.
That queen Elizabeth lived sixty-nine, and reigned forty-five years, means no more than, that the duration of her existence was equal to sixty-nine, and the duration of her government to forty-five annual revolutions of the sun. Locke.
Have I a queen
Past by my fellow rulers of the world?
Have I refus'd their blood to mix with yours;
And rais'd new kings from so obscure a race? Dryden.
- To QUEEN. v. n. To play the queen.
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes and weep. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
- QUEEN-APPLE. n. f.* A species of apple.
The queen-apple is of the summer kind, and a good cyder apple mixed with others. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Her cheeks with kindly claret spread, Aurora like new out of bed,

kind of wild pigeon.
- To QUELL. v. a. [cpellan, Saxon.] To crush; to subdue;
originally, to kill.
What avails
Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain;
Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands Of mightiest? Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
- Compassion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd,
That once disdain'd, she might be disdain'd. Dryden.
He is the guardian of the publick quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world. Athenburg.
- To QUELL. v. n. To die. Seyler.

From country gals to comfitures of court,
Or city's quelquechose, let not report
My mind transport. Donne.
- To QUEME. v. n. [cpeman, Saxon.] To please. An old word. Skinner.
- To QUENCH. v. a.
1. To extinguish fire.
Since stream, air, sand, mine eyes and ears conspire,
What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire. Sidney.
No English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself;
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench. Shakefp.
A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakefp.
The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue;
and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisd. xix. 20.
Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entrench better. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;
One draws and blows reciprocating air,
Others to quench the hissing mass prepare.
You have already quench'd sedition's brand,
And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land. Dryden.
When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Moxon.

QUE

2. To still any passion or commotion.
But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shakefp.
3. To allay thirst.
Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and dif-eases, a drowning of the spirits. South.
4. To destroy.
When death's form appears, she feareth not
An utter quenching or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.
Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.
- To QUENCH. v. n. To cool; to grow cool.
Dost thou think, in time
She will not quench, and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
- QUENCHABLE. adj.* [from quench.] That may be quenched.
- QUENCHER. n. f.* [from quench.] Extinguisher; one that quenches.
- QUENCHLESS. adj.* [from quench.] Unextinguishable.

To thee, dear Thom, myself addressing,
Most querimoniously confessing. Denham.
- QUERIMONIOUSNESS. n. f.* [from querimonia.] Complaining temper.
- QUERIST. n. f.* [from quero, Lat.] An enquirer; an asker of questions.
I shall propose some considerations to my gentle querist. Spekt.
The juggling sea god, when by chance trepan'd
By some instructed querist sleeping on the strand, Impatient of all answers, frait became A stealing brook. Swift's Miscellanies.
- QUERN. n. f.* [cpaern, Saxon.] A handmill.
Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,
And bootless make the breathless hufwife churn. Shakefp.
Some apple-colour'd corn Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn. Chapm.
- QUERPO. n. f.* [corrupted from carpo, Spanish.] A dreis close to the body; a waistcoat.
I would fain see him walk in querpo, like a cased rabbit, without his holy furr upon his back. Dryden.

to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horses; also the stable of a prince. Bailey.
- QUERULOUS. adj.* [querulus, Latin.] Mourning; habitually complaining.
Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time before-mentioned was expired. Hooker.
The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Hawel's Vocal Forest.
Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Locke.
- QUERULOUSNESS. n. f.* [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.
- QUERY. n. f.* [from quere, Lat.] A question; an enquiry to be resolved.
I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a farther search to be made by others. Newton.
This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.
- To QUERY. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.
Three Cambridge sophs
Each prompt to query, answer and debate. Pope.
- QUEST. n. f.* [questus, Fr.]
1. Search; act of seeking.
None but such as this bold ape unblest,
Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest. Hubbard's Tale.
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch. Shakefp.

Ginger renders it brisk, and corrects its windiness, and juice of corianders wherof a few drops tinge and add a pleasant quickness.

QUIKSAND. n. f. [quick and sand.] Moving sand; unsoft ground.

What is Edward, but a ruthless sea?

What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit?

Undergirding the ship, and fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, they strike sail, and so were driven.

But when the vessel is on quicksands cast,

The flowing tide does more the sinking haste.

Trajan, by the adoption of Nerva, seems the tide to her relief, and like another Neptune shoves her off the quicksands.

I have marked out several of the shoals and quicksands of life, in order to keep the unwary from running upon them.

TO QUIKSET. v. a. [quick and set.] To plant with living plants.

In making or mending, as needeth thy ditch, Get let to quickset it, learn cunningly which.

A man may ditch and quickset three poles a day, where the ditch is three foot wide and two foot deep.

QUIKSET. n. f. [quick and set.] Living plant set to grow.

Plant quicksets and transplant fruit trees towards the decore.

Nine in ten of the quickset hedges are ruined for want of skill.

QUICKSIGHTED. adj. [quick and sight.] Having a sharp sight.

No body will deem the quicksighted amongst them to have very enlarged views in ethics.

No article of religion hath credit enough for them; and yet these same cautious and quicksighted gentlemen can swallow down this foolish opinion about percipient atoms.

QUICKSIGHTEDNESS. n. f. [from quicksighted.] Sharpness of sight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle.

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Lat.]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; its nature is so homogeneous and simple, that it is a question whether gold itself be more so: it penetrates the parts of all the other metals, renders them brittle, and in part dissolves them: it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water: it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others, and is the most divisible of all bodies: mercury very readily mixes with gold, silver, lead and tin, by chymical operations, but not without difficulty with copper and iron; and it mixes easily with zink and bismuth among the femetals: the specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest: of the various ores, in which mercury is found, cinnabar is the richest and most valuable, which is extremely heavy, and of a bright and beautiful red colour: native cinnabar is principally found in the mines of Friuli, belonging to the Venetians, in Italy, and some others in Spain, Hungary, and the East Indies: quicksilver is also found sometimes in its pure and fluid state lodged in cavities of hard stones in the cinnabar mines, and the purer ores are chiefly composed of cinnabar in small quantities, mixed with various other substances: the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool: but too free a use of so powerful a medicine cannot be always without danger: the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and then die in a most miserable condition; and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders: however, under proper regulation, it is a most excellent medicine.

Mercury is very improperly called a metal, for though it has weight and similarity of parts, it is neither dissolvable by fire, malleable nor fixed: it seems to constitute a particular class of fossils, and is rather the mother or basis of all metals, than a metal itself: mercury is of considerable use in gilding, making looking-glasses, in refining gold, and various other mechanical operations besides medicine.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in Libia of brimstone and quicksilver burnt.

QUI

QUIKSILVERED. adj. [from quicksilver.] Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the fore-side, and as much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side.

QUIDAM. [Latin.] Somebody.

For envy of so many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland, which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those few many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light.

QUIDDAN. n. f. [quidam, quidam, Lat. quiddam, German, a quince.] Marmalade; confection of quinces made with sugar.

QUIDDIT. n. f. [corrupted from quiddit, Lat. or from quidit, Fr.] A subtlety; an equivocation. A low word.

Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilllets? his cases? and his tricks? Shak.

QUIDDIT. n. f. [quidditas, low Latin.]

1. Efficacy; that which is a proper answer to the question, quid est? a scholastic term.

He could reduce all things to acts, And knew their natures and abstracts, Where entity and quiddity, The ghosts of desubstantiated fly.

2. A trifling nicety; a cavil; a captious question.

Misnomer in our laws, and other quiddities, I leave to the professors of law.

QUIESCENCE. n. f. [from quiesco, Lat.] Rest; repose.

Whether the earth move or rest, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quiescence, the testimony of sense, is weak and frivolous.

QUIESCENT. adj. [quiescent, Latin.] Restless; not being in motion; not moving; lying at repose.

Though the earth move, its motion must needs be as insensible as if it were quiescent.

The right side, from whence the motion of the body begins, is the active or moving side; but the sinister is the weaker or more quiescent side.

Sight takes in at a greater distance and more variety at once, comprehending also quiescent objects, which bearing does not.

If it be in some part moved, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius.

Prestion or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines beyond an obstacle which stops part of the motion, but will bend and spread every way into the quiescent medium, which lies beyond the obstacle.

QUIET. adj. [quiet, Fr. quietus, Latin.]

1. Still; free from disturbance.

Breaking off the end for want of breath, And flying soft, as down to sleep her laid, She ended all her woe in quiet death.

This life is best, If quiet life is best; sweeter to you, That have a sharper known.

2. Peaceable; not turbulent; not offensive; mild.

Let it be in the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. 1 Pet.

3. Still; not in motion.

They laid wait for him, and were quiet all the night.

4. Smooth; not ruffled.

Happy is your grace, That can translate the stubbornness of fortune Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

QUIET. n. f. [quiet, Lat.] Rest; repose; tranquillity; freedom from disturbance; peace; security.

They came into Laish unto a people that were at quiet and secure.

There fix'd their arms, and there renew'd their name, And there in quiet rules.

Indulgent quiet, pow'r serene, Mother of joy and love.

TO QUIET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To calm; to lull; to pacify; to put to rest.

The lowest degree of faith, that can quiet the soul of man, is a firm conviction that God is placable.

2. To still.

Putting together the ideas of moving or quieting corporal motion, joined to substance, we have the idea of an immaterial spirit.

QUIETER. n. f. [from quiet.] The person or thing that quiets.

QUIETISM. n. f. [from quiet.]

What is called by the poets apathy or dispassion, by the scepticks indisturbance, by the Molinists quietism, by common men peace of conscience, seems all to mean but great tranquillity of mind.

QUIETLY. adv. [from quiet.]

1. Calmly; without violent emotion.

Let no man for his own poverty become more oppressing in his bargain, but quietly, modestly and patiently recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

2. Peaceably; without offence.

Although the rebels had behaved themselves quietly and modestly by the way as they went; yet they doubted that would but make them more hungry to fall upon the spoil in the end.

3. At rest; without agitation.

QUIETNESS. n. f. [from quiet.]

1. Coolness of temper.

This cruel quietness neither returning to mislike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but gracious still after one manner.

2. Peace; tranquillity.

Stop effusion of our christian blood, And 'tablish quietness on ev'ry side.

3. Stillness; calmness.

QUIETNESS. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; still; undisturbed.

Not in use.

Let the night be calm and quietness, Without tempestuous forms or sad affray.

QUIETUDE. n. f. [quietude, Fr. from quiet.] Rest; repose; tranquillity.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity in the affections.

QUILL. n. f.

1. The hard and strong feather of the wing, of which pens are made.

Birds have three other hard substances proper to them; the bill, which is of a like matter with the teeth, the shell of the egg, and their quills.

2. The instrument of writing.

I will only touch the duke's own deportment in that island, the proper subject of my quill.

Those lives they fail'd to rescue by their quill, Their muse would make immortal with her quill.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear, To him that notches sticks at Westminster.

3. Prick or dart of a porcupine.

Near these was the black prince of Monomotapa, by whose side was seen the quill darting porcupine.

4. Reed on which weavers wind their threads.

The presumptuous daniel rashly dar'd The goddess's self to challenge to the field, And to compare with her in curious skill.

5. The instrument with which musicians strike their strings.

His flying fingers and harmonious quill Strike sev'n distinguishing notes, and sev'n at once they fill.

QUILL. n. f. [quidlibet, Lat.] Subtlety; nicety; fraudulent distinction.

Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his quilllets? his cases? and his tricks?

A great foul weighs in the scale of reason, what it is to judge of, rather than dwell with too scrupulous a diligence upon little quilllets and niceties.

Py her with love letters and billets, And bait them well for quirks and quilllets.

QUILT. n. f. [couette, Fr. quilt, Dutch; culcita, culcitra, Lat.]

A cover made by stitching one cloth over another with some soft substance between them.

Quilts of roses and spices are nothing so helpful, as to take a cake of new bread, and bedew it with a little sack.

In both tables, the beds were covered with magnificent quilts amongst the richer sort.

She on the quilt links with becoming woe, Wrapt in a gown, for sickness and for show.

TO QUILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To stitch one cloth upon another with something soft between them.

The sharp steel arriving forcibly On his horse neck before the quilted fell, Then from the head the body sundred quite.

A bag quilted with bran is very good, but it drieth too much.

Entellus for the strife prepares, Strip'd of his quilted coat, his body bares, Compos'd of mighty bone.

A chair was ready, So quilted, that he lay at ease reclin'd.

Mayn't I quilt my rope? it galls my neck.

QUINARY. adj. [quinarium, Lat.] Consisting of five.

This quinary number of elements ought to have been restrained to the generality of animals and vegetables.

QUINCE. n. f. [coin, Fr. quinden, German.]

1. The tree.

The quince tree is of a low stature; the branches are diffused and crooked; the flower and fruit is like that of the pear tree; but, however cultivated, the fruit is sour and astringent, and is covered with a kind of down: of this the species are fix.

2. The fruit.

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

A quince, in token of fruitfulness, by the laws of Solon, was given to the brides of Athens upon the day of their marriage.

TO QUINCH. v. n. [this word seems to be the same with quench, winch and quack.] To stir; to founce as in resentment or pain.

Below all my soldiers in such fort as I have, that no part of all that realm shall be able to dare to quinch.

QUINCUNXIAL. adj. [from quincunx.] Having the form of a quincunx.

Of a pentagonal or quincunxial disposition, Sir Thomas Brown produces several examples in his discourse about the quincunx.

QUINCUNX. n. f. [Latin.]

Quincunx order is a plantation of trees, disposed originally in a square, consisting of five trees, one at each corner, and a fifth in the middle, which disposition, repeated again and again, forms a regular grove, wood or wilderness; and, when viewed by an angle of the square or parallelogram, presents equal or parallel alleys.

QUI

When the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights.

South's Sermons.
QUINTESSENTIAL, adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous assertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, specially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens; so neither is there to the light thereof. Hakew.
QUINTIN, n. f. [I know not whence derived; Minshaw deduces it from quintus, Lat. and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; palus quintanus, Lat. Amf. quintaine, Fr.] An upright post, on the top of which a cross post turned upon a pin, at one end of the cross post was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand bag; the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and pass by before the sand bag coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bridegroom,
Hath challeng'd either wide countess;
Come cut and long tail, for there be Six batchelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company,
And each one hath his livery. Benj. Johnson.

QUINTUPLE, n. f. [quintuplus, Lat.] Fivefold.
In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

QUIP, n. f. [derived, by the etymologists, from whip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spang like, the more she spurns his love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still. Shakep.
If I sent him word his beard was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the quip modest. Shakep. As You Like It.

Nymph bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton.

To QUIP, v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms. Ainsworth.
QUIRE, n. f. [chorus, Fr. choro, Italian.]

1. A body of singers; a chorus.
The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their caroling. Fa. Qu.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakep.

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born. Milton.

I may worship thee
For ay, with temples vow'd and virgin quires. Milton.
As in beauty the furpals'd the quires,
So nobler than the rest was her attire. Dryden.

2. The part of the church where the service is sung.
I am all on fire,
Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage. Cleveland.

Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quires,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play.
The fox obscene to gaping toms retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires. Pope.

3. [Cabier, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.
To QUIRE, v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakep.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quird with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an enunch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lull asleep. Shakep. Coriolanus.

QUIRISTER, n. f. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.
The coy quiristers, that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony. Thomson's Spring.

QUIRK, n. f. [of this word I can find no rational derivation.]
1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.
I've felt too many quirts of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto't. Shakep.

2. Smart taunt.
Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; or, like, this is a man of that quirt. Shakep.
I may chance to have some odd quirts and remnants of wit broken on me. Shakep.

QUI

Conceits, puns, quirts or quibbles, jests and repartees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth.

3. Subtily; nicely; artful distinction.
Most fortunately he hath atchiev'd a maid,
That paragon description and wild fame, Shakep.
One that excels the quirts of blazoning pens.

Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail; how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law quirk? Decay of Piety.
Ply her with love letters and billets,
And bait them well for quirts and quilllets. Hudibras.

There are a thousand quirts to avoid the stroke of the law. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. Loose light tune.
Now the chappell's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of pray'r;
Light quirts of musick, broken and uneven. Pope.

To QUIR, v. a. part. pass. quit; pret. I have quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitar, Italian; quitar, Spanish.]
1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.

We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Jos. ii. 20.
By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denham.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.
Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent. Taylor.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much; bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumbersome charge. Milton.

To quit you wholly of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it.
3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.

Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown. David.
4. To clear himself of an affair.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd hath left them years of mourning. Milton.

5. To repay; to requite.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Fa. Queen.

Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shakep. King Lear.

6. To vacate obligations.
For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted. B. Johnson.

One step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tinctumount.
They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compass'd with that wit and those senses which are our own. Hobbes, b. i.

Far other plaints, tears and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire. Fairfax.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it. South's Sermons.

Still I shall hear, and never quit the score, Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theſeid o'er and o'er. Dryd.
Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple's Miscellanies.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve; to acquit.
Nor further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Fairfax.

9. To abandon; to forsake.
Their father,
Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow,
That he quit being. Shakep. Cymbeline.

Honours are promis'd
To all will quit 'em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courtes. Benj. Johnson.

Such

QUO

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity. Locke.

10. To resign; to give up.
The prince, renown'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms, Prior.
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace.

QUITCHGRASS, n. f. [spice, Saxon.] Dog grass.
They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.

QUITE, adv. [this is derived, by the etymologists, from quitté, discharged, free, Fr. which however at first appearance unlikely is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was, in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Hyker, b. i.
He hath told us, and quite devoured our money. Gen. xxxi.
If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.

The same actions may be aimed at different ends, and arise from quite contrary principles. Addison's Spectator.
QUITRENT, n. f. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.

Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quittrent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple's Miscellanies.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quittrents upon the estate. Addison's Spectator, N° 517.

QUITS, interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.
QUITTANCE, n. f. [quittance, Fr.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.
Now I am rememb'ed, he corn'd at me!
But that's all one; omittance is no quittance. Shakep.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.
Mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Monmouth. Shakep. Henry IV. p. ii.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no meed but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shakep. Timon of Athens.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of debt and merit. Shakep.
To QUITTANCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To repay; to recompense. A word not used.

Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit. Shakep.

QUITTER, n. f.
1. A deliverer. Ainsworth.
2. Scoria of tin. Ainsworth.

QUITTERBONE, n. f.
Quitterbone is a hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

QUIVER, n. f. [this word seems to be corrupted from cuvir, Fr. or cuvir.] A case for arrows.

As Dianne hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts the stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's head;

With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Dianne heals with Cupid's dart. Spenser.
Diana's nymphs would be array'd in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peuchon on Drawing.

Her founding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd.
QUIVER, adj. Nimble; active. Dryden.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his nice thus; and he would about and about. Shakep.

To QUIVER, v. n.
1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind. Shakep.

Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.
With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground. Dryden.

Eurydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd. Addison.
Dancing fun beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering shade. Gay's Trivia.

Pope.

QUO

The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze. Pope.
2. To shiver; to shudder.

Zelmae would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on. Sidney, b. ii.
QUIVERED, adj. [from quiver.]

1. Furnished with a quiver.
'Tis chaffity,
She that has that, is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds. Milton.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.
From him whose quills stand quivered at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

To QUO, v. n. [a low word.] To move as the embrio does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.
QUODLIBET, n. f. [Latin.] A nice point; a subtilty.

He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat, Swore, he had never felt it beat. Prior.

QUODLIBETARIAN, n. f. [quodlibet, Lat.] One who talks or disputes on any subject. Dia.
QUODLIBETICAL, adj. [quodlibet, Lat.] Not restrained to a particular subject: in the schools theses or problems, anciently proposed to be debated for curiosity or entertainment, were so called. Dia.

QUOIF, n. f. [coiffe, Fr.]
1. Any cap with which the head is covered. See COIF.
Hence thou fickle quoif,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,

Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit. Shakep.
2. The cap of a serjeant at law.
To QUOIF, v. a. [coiffer, Fr.] To cap; to dress with a head-dress.

She is always quoeff with the head of an elephant, to show that this animal is the breed of that country. Addison.
QUOIFFURE, n. f. [coiffure, Fr.] Head-dress.

The lady in the next medal is very particular in her quoeffure. Addison on Ancient Medals.
QUOIL, n. f. See COIL.

QUOIN, n. f. [coin, Fr.]
1. Corner.
A sudden tempest from the desert flew
With horrid wings, and thundered as it blew,
Then whirling round, the quoins together strook. Sandys.

Build brick houses with strong and firm quoins or columns at each end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. An instrument for raising warlike engines. Ainsworth.
QUOIR, n. f. [coete, Dutch.]

1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.
He plays at quoits well. Shakep. Henry IV.
When he played at quoits, he was allowed his breeches and stockings. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly; the game of quoits is a game of skill; the discus was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

To QUOIR, v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quoits; to play at quoits. Dryden uses it to throw the discus. See the noun.
Noble youths for mastership should strive
To quoit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive. Dryden.

To QUOIR, v. a. To throw.
Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling. Shak.
QUONDAM, [Latin.] Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

This is the quondam king, let's seize upon him. Shakep.
What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

QUOOK, praterite of quake. Obsolete.
Freely up those royal spoils he took,
Yet at the lion's skin he only quook. Spenser.

QUORUM, n. f. [Latin.] A bench of justices; such a number of any officers as is sufficient to do business.
They were a parcel of mummings, and being himself one of the quorum in his own country, he wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison's Freeholder, N° 44.

QUOTA, n. f. [quotus, Lat.] A share; a proportion as assigned to each.
Scarce one in this list but engages to supply a quota of brisk young fellows, equip with hats and feathers. Addison.

QUOTATION, n. f. [from quote.]
1. The act of quoting; citation.
2. Passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.

He, that has but ever so little examined the citations of writers, cannot doubt how little credit the quotations deserve, where the originals are wanting. Locke.
He rang'd his tropes, and preach'd up patience, Back'd his opinion with quotations. Prior.

To QUOTE.

Q U O

To QUOTE. v. a. [quotere, Fr.] To cite an author or passage of an author; to adduce by way of authority or illustration the words of another.

The second chapter to the Romans is here quoted only to paint the margin.

St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying. Stillingfleet.
He changed his mind, say the papers, and quote for it Melchior Adams and Hospinian.

He quoted texts right upon our Saviour, though he expounded them wrong. Atterbury.

He will, in the middle of a session, quote passages out of Plato and Pindar. Swift's Miscellanies.

Quo'tER. n. f. [from quote.] Citer; he that quotes.

I proposed this passage entire, to take off the disguise which its quater put upon it. Atterbury.

Quo'tH. verb. imperfect. [this is only part of quodan, Saxon, retained in English, and is now only used in ludicrous language. It is used by Sidney irregularly in the second person.] Quoth I, say I or said I; quoth he, says he or said he.

Enjoying quoth you. Sidney, b. ii.
Shall we, quoth he, so basely brook

This paltry als. Hudibras.

QUOTIDIAN. adj. [quotidian, Fr. quotidianus, Latin.] Daily; happening every day.

Quotidian things, and equidistant hence Shut in for man in one circumference. Donne.

Nor was this a short fit of shaking, as an ague, but a quotidian fever, always increasing to higher inflammation. King Charles.

QUOTIDIAN. n. f. [febris quotidiana, Lat.] A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.

If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love. Shakespeare.

Quo'tIENT. n. f. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Latin.]

In arithmetick, quotient is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers the one by the other. Cocker.

To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they consider the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whose product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which sum they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

R.

R A B

R, Is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as red, rose, more, mutual: in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an h, rhapsody: r is never mute, unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.

To RA'BATE. v. n. [rabatre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again. Ainsworth.

To RA'BRET. v. a. [rabatre, rabster, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbeting. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets, but that on the ground-sill, are grooved square. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

RA'BRET. n. f. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.

Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-post. Moxon's Mechan. Exerc.

RA'BBLE. n. f. A doctor among the Jews.

The Hebrew rabbins say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate and throat. Camden's Remains.

Be not ye called rabbis; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Mat. xxiii. 8.

RA'BBIT. n. f. [rabbe, rabbelin, Dutch.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married, as the went to the garden for partly to stuff a rabbit. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi coniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin?

RA'BBLE. n. f. [rabula, Lat. rabulari, low Lat.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy,
Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths? Shakespeare.

Go bring the rabble here to this place. Shakespeare.

Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.

The better sort abhors scurrility,
And often censures what the rabble like. Rescuer.

That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South's Sermons.

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.

In change of government,
The rabble rule their great oppressors fate,
Do foreign justice and revenge the state. Dryden.

His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment. Addison's Freeholder, N. 24.

RA'BLEMENT. n. f. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people.

A rude rabblement,
Who's like he never saw, he durst not bide,
But got his ready steed, and fast away 'gan ride. Fa. 2y.

R A C

The rabblement houted, clapp'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement. Camden's Remains.

RA'BID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.

RA'BINET. n. f. A kind of smaller ordnance. Ainsworth.

RACE. n. f. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]

1. A family ascending.

2. Family descending.

He in a moment will create
Another world; out of man, a race
Of men innumerable, there to dwell. Milton.

Male he created thee, but thy consort Female for race. Milton.

High as the mother of the gods in place,
And proud like her of an immortal race. Dryden.

Hence the long race of Alban fathers come. Dryden.

3. A generation; a collective family.

A race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

4. A particular breed.

Instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room. Milton.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance. Locke.

5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgment in contrivance. Temple.

7. [Ras, Islandick.] Contest in running.

To describe races and games
Or tilting furniture. Milton.

8. Course on the feet.

The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts. Bacon.

9. Progress; course.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples having taught them, never stooped his race till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame. Milton.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run. Milton.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race though steep. Milton.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past,
New to his friends embrace. Pope's Odyssey.

10. Train; process.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin, which he re-obtained. Bacon.

RA'CEHORSE. n. f. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a racehorse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries. Addison.

RACEMA'TION. n. f. [racemus, Lat.] Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RACEMI'FEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero, Latin.] Bearing clusters.

RA'CE.

RAC

- RA'CER. n. f. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.
His fumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other pegasus can fly;
So the dull cel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Darset.
A poet's form the plac'd before their eyes,
And bade the nimblest racer seize the prize. Pope.
RA'CINESS. n. f. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.
RACK. n. f. [rack, Dutch, from raken, to stretch.]
1. An engine to torture.
Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer. Shakefp. King Lear.
Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress. Taylor.
Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addison.
2. Torture; extreme pain.
A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject. Temple.
A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference. Addison.
3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.
These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball.
The fillets turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel. Dryden.
5. [Rack, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.
That, which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
The great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherits, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind. Shakefp. Tempest.
We often see against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakefp. Hamlet.
The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise. Bacon's Natural History.
As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.
6. [hacca, the occiput, Saxon; raca, Hindick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.
7. A grate.
8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.
Their bulls they feed to pastures far,
Or hills, or feed them at full racks within. May's Virgil.
The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.
He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:
From their full racks the generous steeds retire. Addison.
9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See ARRACK.
To RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before
the wind.
Three glorious funs, each one a perfect fun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But fever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. Shakefp.
To RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To torment by the rack.
Hold, O dreadful Sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man. Dryden and Lee.
2. To torment; to harass.
Th' apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milton.
3. To harass by exaction.
The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides their covenants, what he pleaseth. Spenser.
The commons ha't thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakefp.
He took possession of his just estate,
Nor rack'd his tenants with increase of rent. Dryden.
4. To rack; to force to performance.
They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences. Hooker.
The wisest among the heathens rack'd their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To stretch; to extend.
Nor have I money nor commodity
To raise a present sum;
Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost. Shakefp.

RAD

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees. I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse; this is perhaps of the same race.
It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much the footer.
Some roll their cask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days resettlement, rack it off. Mortim.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the utter-most.
Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church? Swift's Miscellanies.
RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] One who pays the uttermost rent.
Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred; yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or under-tenant pays. Locke.
RA'CKET. n. f. [of uncertain derivation; M. Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from gaxia, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]
1. An irregular clattering noise.
That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keep'st not racket there. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
2. A confused talk, in burlesque language.
Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and every night in an uproar. Swift.
3. [Ragotte, Fr.] The instrument with which players strike the ball. Whence perhaps all the other senses.
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will in France play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard. Shakefp.
The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot: if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion; as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.
He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second causes. Branhall against Hobbs.
RA'CKING. n. f.
Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread; and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier. Far. Dict.
RA'CKOON. n. f.
The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out at nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea side, where it is hunted by dogs. Baileys.
RA'CY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root.] Strong;
flavorous; tasting of the soil.
Rich ray verbes in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and see. Cowley.
From his brain that Helicon distill,
Whose ray liquor did his offspring fill. Denham.
The cyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more racy. Mortimer's Husbandry.
The hospitable sage, in sign
Of social welcome, mix'd the racy wine,
Late from the mellowing cask restor'd to light,
By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright. Pope.
RAD. the old pret. of read. Spenser.
RAD.
Rad, red and rod, differing only in dialect, signify counsel; as Conrad, powerful or skilful in counsel; Ethelred, a noble counsellor; Rodbert, eminent for counsel: Eubulus and Thrasylbulus have almost the same sense. Gilpin.
RA'DDOCK, or raddock. n. f. A bird.
The raddock would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this. Shakefp.
RA'DIANCE. n. f. [radiare, Lat.] Sparkling lustre; glitter.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakefp. K. Lear.
Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiance, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gum, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The son
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiance, which,
though we cannot describe, will bear some resemblance.
The rapid radiance instantaneous strikes
Th' illumin'd mountain. Thomson's Spring.
4. RA'DIANT.

RAD

- RA'DIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling;
emitting rays.
There was a fun of gold radiant upon the top, and before,
A small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.
Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is she alone. Milton's Arcades.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glit'ring arms and beamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.
To RAD'IATE. v. n. [radies, Lat.] To emit rays; to shine;
to sparkle.
Though with wit and parts their possessor could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth; yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleas'd to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those feather'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.
RA'DIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.
The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Aulonius. Addison.
RAD'IATION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radiation, Fr.]
1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.
Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Donne.
2. Emission from a center every way.
Sound parallelleth in many things with the light, and radiation of things visible. Bacon's Natural History.
RADICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix, Latin.]
1. Primitive; original.
The differences, which are secondary and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and de-terminate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.
Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion. Bentley.
2. Implanted by nature.
The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bac.
If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.
The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbutnot.
3. Serving to origination.
RA'DICALITY. n. f. [from radical.] Origination.
There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the feminality of dandel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RA'DICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.
It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.
RA'DICALNESS. n. f. [from radical.] The state of being radical.
To RADICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.
Meditation will radiate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable confidence in the soul. Hammond.
Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radiated beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it is repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object; in which radiated knowledge, if the memory confit, there would be no need of referring those atoms in the brain. Glanvill's Defence.
RADICA'TION. n. f. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of fixing deep.
They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls.
RA'DICLE. n. f. [radicle, Fr. from radix, Lat.] Radicle is that part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RAG

- RA'DISH. n. f. [rædic, Sax. radis, raifort, Fr. raphanus, Lat.]
A root.
The flower of the radish consists of four leaves, which are placed in the form of a cross; out of the flower-cup rises the point, which afterward turns to a pod in form of an horn, that is thick, spungy, and furnished with a double row of roundish seeds, which are separated by a thin membrane:
there are five species; of that which is commonly cultivated in the kitchen-gardens for its root, there are several varieties; as the small topped, the deep-red, and the long topped stripped radish. Miller.
RA'DIUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The semi-diameter of a circle.
2. A bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from

To RA'FFLE. v. n. [raffler, to snatch, Fr.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.
Letters from Hamptead give me an account, there is a late infatuation there, under the name of a raffing shop. Tatler.
RA'FFLE. n. f. [raffe, Fr. from the verb.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.
The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle. Arbutnot on Coins.
RAFT. n. f. [probably from ratis, Latin.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.
Where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft. Shakefp.
Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.
RAFT. part. pass. of raff or raff. Spenser. Torn; rent.
RA'FTER. n. f. [raefter, Sax. rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Juvius, from raaf tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.
The rafters of my body, bone,
Being fill with you, the muscle, sinew and vein;
Which tile this house, will come again. Denne.
Shepherd,
I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'itry halls. Milton.
On them the Trojans cast Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.
From the East, a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.
The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift's Miscel.
RA'FTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.
No raftred roofs with dance and tabor found,
No noon-tide bell invites the country round. Pope.
RAG. n. f. [hag, Saxon; rag, Saxon; rag, Saxon.]

Cows, hoods and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.
Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands. Mortimer.
2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out cloaths.
Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind. Shakefp. King Lear.
Worn like a cloth;
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.
3. A fragment of dress.
He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone,
Before one rag of form was on. Hudibras, p. i.
RAGAMUFFIN. n. f. [from rag and I know not what else.]
I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakefp. Henry IV.
Shall we brook that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin, Ralpho, vapouring and huffing. Hudibras, p. i.
Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy; and then set it on fire. Swift.
RAGE. n. f. [rage, Fr.]
1. Violent anger; vehement fury.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of uskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

RAI

The fair, the wife, the virtuous. Waller.
3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.
The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall juggle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the light-enings. Nab. ii. 4.
The maddling wheels of brazen chariots rag'd, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.
RAGEFUL. adj. [rage and full.] Furious; violent.
This courtesy was worse than a balfinado to Zelmene; so that again with rag'd eyes he bad him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it.
A popular orator may represent vices in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hamn.
RAGGED. adj. [from rag-]
1. Rent into tatters.
How like a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth the return
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails, Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind. Shaksp.

boned carcass, for a smooth fat one. L'Estrange.
What shepherd owns those ragged sheep?
RAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from ragged.] State of being dressed in tatters.
Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you. Shaksp.
RAGINGLY. adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.
RAGMAN. n. f. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.
RAGOUT. n. f. [French.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.
To the stage permit
Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes dress,
'Tis talk enough for thee to expose a Roman feast. Dryden.
No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of snails. Add.
When art and nature join, th' effect will be Some nice ragouts, or charming fricassies. King's Cookery.
RAGWORT. n. f. [rag and wort.] A plant.
Ragwort hath a radiated flower, the tube of which is almost of a cylindrical figure, and the seeds are fastened to a down; the leaves are deeply lacinated or jagged. Miller.

served only in the word night-rail.
To RAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose with rails.
The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners; this should first have been planched over, and railed about with ballisters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
As the churchyard ought to be divided from other profane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed. Ayliffe.
Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion-table. Addison's Spectator, N° 112.
2. To range in a line.
They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed some of them at London and Wapping, and the rest at divers places upon the sea coast. Bacon's Henry VII.
To RAIL. v. n. [yailer, Fr. ralien, Dutch.]
1. To rail against.
Your husband is in his old limes again; he fo rails against all married mankind, curses all Eve's daughters. Shaksp.
What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one,
that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee. Shaksp.
'Till thou can't rail the fials from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud. Shaksp.
He tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd at,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shaksp. King Lear.
Of words cometh railings and evil furnishings. 1 Tim. vi.
Angels bring not railing accusation against them. 2 Pet. ii.
If any is angry, and rails at it, he may securely. Lect.
Thou art my blood, where Johnson has no part;
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand?
Lestbia for ever on me rails. Dryden.
To talk of me he never fails. Swift.
RAILER. n. f. [from rail.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.

Creative wisdom. Thomson's Summer.
RAILERY. n. f. [railerie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical meriment.
Let railerie be without malice or heat. Benj. Johnson.
A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: railerie of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble. Addison's Freeholders, N° 6.
Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is almost sufficient to turn them into railerie.
Addison on Ancient Models.
To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle,
and the railerie of the prophane. Rogers's Sermons.
RAIMENT. n. f. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; cloaths; drefs; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.
His raiments, though mean, received handfomeneys by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.

Israel here had famih'd, had not God
Rain'd from heav'n manna. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
RAIN. n. f. [ren, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.
When shall we three meet again;
In thunder, lightning, or in rain. Shaksp.
With strange rains, hails, and showers were they perie-cuted. Wisdom xvi. 16.
The loft clouds pour
Into the sea an useless show'r,
And the vast fallows curst the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Waller.
Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it be-condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Ray.
RAINBOW. n. f. [rain and bow.] The iris; the femicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.
Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so festively to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.
To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shaksp.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings dispread in the form of a femicircle, the feathers of sundry colours. Peach.
They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sunshine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton's Opticks.
The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.
RAINDEER. [phany, Saxon; rangifer, Latin.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

indulgent towards their children. Bacon.
He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue. Taylor.
Raiser of human kind! by nature cast,
Naked and helpless. Thomson's Autumn.
RAISIN. n. f. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.]
Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried either by the sun or the heat of an oven: grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars: the finest are the fruit of the vitis Damascena. Hill's Materia Med.
Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which, being betimes distilled, afford an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.
RAKE. n. f. [ragstrum, Lat. pacc, Sax. racche, Dutch.]
1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.
At Midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tusser.
O that thy bounteous deity wou'd please
To guide my rake upon the chinking found
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.
He examines his face in the stream, combs his rufal locks with a rake. Garrick.
2. [Racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rekel, Dutch, a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.
The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.
Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen.
Men, some to bus'ness, some to pleasure take;
But ev'ry woman is at heart a rake. Pope.
The fire saw smiling his own virtues wake;
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake. Pope.
To RAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gather with a rake.
Mow barley, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tusser.
Harrow iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up. May's Virgil's Georgicks.

RAL

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dunghills; and accordingly the apottle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.

2. To clear with a rake.

As they rake the green appearing ground,
The russet hay-cock rises. Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence.

An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collector's pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!
How, if 'th' name of thrift,
Does he rake this together. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

A sport more formidable
Had *ra*k'd together village rabble. Hudibras, p. i.

The statesman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.

5. To heap together and cover.

Here 'th' fands
Thee I'll rake up, the post uncancelled Of murth'rous lechers. Shakesp. King Lear.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
But 'tis the fire *ra*k'd up that has the heat,
And keeps it long. Suckling.

TO RAKE. v. n.

1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.

If you hide the crown
Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Shakesp. South.

Another finds the way to dye in grain;
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,
Then melts the mass. Dryden's Persius.

One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be reviv'd, but when found or significance is wanting. Dryden.

After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts. Addison.

To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood. Tate.

To RANKLE. v. n. [from rank.] To fester; to breed corruption; to be inflamed in body or mind.
As when two boars with rankling malice met,
Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret. Fa. Queen.

I little smelt did feel;
But soon it fore increased,
And now it ranketh more and more,
And inwardly it festereth fore. Spenser's Pastoral.

The grief thereof him wondrous sore did eale,
Ne might his rankling pain with patience be appeale. Fairy Queen.

That fresh bleeding wound
Whilome doth rankle in my riven breast. Fairy Queen.
Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakefp.

The storm of his own rage the fool confounds,
And envy's rankling sting th' imprudent wounds.
Thou shalt feel, enrag'd with inward pains,
The hydra's venom rankling in thy veins. Sandys.

I have endur'd the rage of secret grief,
A malady that burns and rankles inward.
On the rank'd foul the fury falls. Reeve.

RAN

RA'NKLY. adv. [from rank.] Coarsely; grossly.
'Tis given out, that, sleeping in my garden,
A serpent stung me: so the whole ear of Denmark
Is, by a forged process of my death, Shakefp. Hamlet.
Rankly abus'd.

RA'NKNESS. n. f. [from rank.] Exuberance; superfluity of growth.
It bringeth forth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place, or defrauded of nourishment, faileth. Hooker, b. v. f. iii.

Begin you to grow upon me; I will physick your rankness. Shakefp. As You Like It.

Among the crowd i' th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more; I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.

We'll like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds, we have o'erlook'd. Shak.
The crane's pride is in the rankness of her wing. L'Estr.

He the stubborn soil manur'd,
With rules of husbandry the rankness cur'd;
Tam'd us to manners. Dryden.

RA'NNY. n. f. The shrewmouse.
The mus araneus, the shrewmouse or ranny. Brown.

To RA'NSACK. v. a. [ran, Saxon, and saka, Swedish, to search for or seize.] 1. To plunder; to pillage.
A covetous spirit,
Warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend,
Who it to rob and ransack did intend. Fairy Queen.

Their vow is made to ransack Troy.
Men by his suggestion taught,
Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
Rifled the bowels of the earth. Milton.

The ransack'd city, taken by our toils,
We left, and hither brought the golden spoils. Dryden.
The spoils which they from ransack'd houses brought,
And golden bowls from burning altars caught. Dryden.

2. To search narrowly.
I ransack the several caverns, and search into the store-houses of water, to find out where that mighty mass of water, which overflowed the earth, is belidew'd. Woodward.

3. To violate; to deflower.
With greedy force he 'gan the fort assail,
Whereof he weened possessed soon to be,
And with rich spoil of ransacked chastity. Fairy Queen.

RA'NSOME. n. f. [ransom, Fr.] Price paid for redemption from captivity or punishment.
By his captivity in Austria, and the heavy ransom that he paid for his liberty, Richard was hindered to pursue the conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

Ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise,
The ransom paid, which man from death redeemes,
His death for man. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Has the prince lost his army or his liberty?
Tell me what province they demand for ransom. Denham.
This as a ransom Albemarle did pay,
For all the glories of so great a life. Dryden.

To adore that great mystery of divine love, God's sending his only son into this world to save sinners, and to give his life a ransom for them, would be noble exercise for the pens of the greatest wits. Tillotson's Sermons.

Th' avenging pow'r
Thus will perfit, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire,
And ransom free restor'd to his abode. Dryden.

To RANSOME. v. a. [ransommer, Fr.] To redeem from captivity or punishment.
How is't with Titus Lartius?
—Condemning some to death and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other. Shakefp.

I will ransom them from the grave, and redeem them from death. Hesiod xiii. 14.

He'll dying rise, and rising with him raise
His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life. Milton.

RA'NSOMELESS. adj. [from ransome.] Free from ransom.
Ransomeless here we set our prisoners free. Shakefp.

Deliver him
Up to his pleasure ransomeless and free. Shakefp.

To RANT. v. n. [randen, Dutch, to rave.] To rave in violent or high sounding language without proportionable dignity of thought.
Look where my ranting host of the garter comes; there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Nay, an thou't mouth, I'll rant as well as thou. Shak.
They have attacked me; some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillington.

RANT.

RAP

RANT. n. f. [from the verb.] High sounding language unsupported by dignity of thought.

Dryden himself, to please a fantastick age,
Was forc'd to let his judgment stoop to rage,
To a wild audience he conform'd his voice,
Comply'd to custom, but not err'd through choice;
Deem then the people's, not the writer's sin,
Almanzor's rage, and rants of Maximin. Granville.
This is a stoical rant, without any foundation in the nature of man or reason of things. Atterbury's Preface.

RANTER. n. f. [from rant.] A ranting fellow.

RANTIPOLE. adj. [this word is wantonly formed from rant.] Wild; raving; rakish. A low word.

What at years of discretion, and comport yourself at this rantipole rate!

To RANTIPOLE. v. n. To run about wildly. It is a low word.

The eldest was a termagant imperious wench; she used to rantipole about the house, pinch the children, kick the servants, and torture the cats and dogs. Arbutnot.

RANULA. n. f. [Latin.] A ranula is a soft swelling, possessing those falivals under the tongue: it is made by congestion, and its progress filleth up the space between the jaws, and maketh a tumour externally under the chin. Wisenan's Surgery.

RANUNCULUS. n. f. Crowfoot.

Ranunculus excel all flowers in the richness of their colours: of them there is a great variety. Mortimer.

To RAP. v. n. [happan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow.

Knock me at this gate
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate. Shakefp.

With one great peal they rap the door,
Like footmen on a visiting day. Prior.

He was provoked in the spirit of magistracy, upon discovering a judge, who rapped out a great oath at his footman. Addison.

To RAP. v. a. [from rapio extra se, Lat.]

1. To affect with rapture; to strike with extasy; to hurry out of himself.

These are speeches of men, not comforted with the hope of that they desire, but rapped with admiration at the view of enjoyed bliss. Hooker.

Beholding the face of God, in admiration of so great excellency, they all adore him; and being rapt with the love of his beauty, they cleave inseparably for ever unto him. Hook.

What, thus rapt you? are you well? Shakefp.

The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported And rapt in secret studies. Shakefp.

You're rapt in some work, some dedication
To the great lord. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

I'm rapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears. Addison.

It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the divine architect. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive, a virgin bear a son!

Let heav'n seize it, all at once 'tis fir'd,
Not touch'd, but rapt; not waken'd, but inspir'd. Pope.

2. To snatch away.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the fkyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to flyne. P. 2.

Underneath a bright sea flow'd
Of Jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
Who after came from earth, falling arriv'd Wasted by angels, or flew o'er the lake

Rap'd in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds.
Standing on earth, not rapt above the pole. Milton.

To RAP and rend. [more properly rap and rei; rapan, Saxon, to bind, and rana, Islandick, to plunder.] To seize by violence.

Their husbands robb'd, and made hard shifts
T' administer unto their gifts
All they could rap and rend and pilfer,
To scraps and ends of gold and silver. Hadibras, p. ii.

RAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick smart blow.

How comest thou to go with thy arm tied up? has old Lewis given thee a rap over thy fingers ends? Arbutnot.

RAPACIOUS. adj. [rapace, Fr. rapax, Lat.] Given to plunder; seizing by violence.

Well may thy Lord, appears'd, Redeem thee quite from death's rapacious claim. Milton.

On that rapacious hand for ever blaze?
Soon heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
By rapacious. Pope.

RAPACIOUSLY. adv. [from rapacious.] By rapine; by violent robbery.

RAPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from rapacious.] The quality of being rapacious.

RAPACITY. n. f. [rapacitas, Lat. rapacitas, Fr. from rapax.] Addictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenousness.

RAP

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church. Sprat.

RAPE. n. f. [rapt, Fr. raptus, Latin.]

1. Violent defloration of chastity.

You are both decypher'd
For villains mark'd with rape. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.

Rape call you it, to seize my own,
My true betrothed love. Shakefp. Titus Andronicus.

The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards assent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest. Bacon's Henry VII.

Witness that night
In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape. Milton.

The haughty fair,
Who not the rape ev'n of a god could bear.
Tell Thracian tyrant's alter'd shape,
And dire revenge of Philomela's rape. Dryden.

2. Privation; act of taking away.

Pear grew after pear,
Fig after fig came; time made never rape.
Of any dainty there. Chapman's Odyssey.

3. Something snatched away.

Sad widows by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.

Where now are all my hopes? oh never more Shall they revive! nor death her rapes restore! Sandys.

4. The juice of grapes is drawn as well from the rape, or whole grapes pluck'd from the cluster, and wine pour'd upon them in a vessel, as from a vat, where they are bruised. Ray.

5. A plant, from the seed of which oil is expressed.

RAPID. adj. [rapide, Fr. rapidus, Lat.] Quick; swift.

Part thum the goal with rapid wheels. Milton.

While you so smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,
That rapid motion does but rest appear. Dryden.

RAPIDITY. n. f. [rapiditas, Fr. rapidus, from rapidus, Lat.]

Celerity; velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them so by our rapidity of pronunciation. Addison's Spectator.

RAPIDLY. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

RAPIDNESS. n. f. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.

RAPIER. n. f. [rapire, Fr. so called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thrusting.

I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point. Shakefp.

A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope's Essay on Homer's Battle.

RAPIER-FISH. n. f.

The rapier-fish, called xiphias, grows sometimes to the length of five yards: the sword, which grows level from the snout of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew's Museum.

RAPIRE. n. f. [rapina, Lat. rapine, Fr.]

1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. King Charles.

The logick of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds averfion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decay of Piety.

2. Violence; force.

Her least action overaw'd
His malice, and with rapine sweet becau'd
His fierceness of its fierce intent. Milton.

RAPPER. n. f. [from rap.] One who strikes.

RA'PPORT. n. f. [rappat, Fr.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others.

'Tis obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.

To RAP. v. n. [this word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rapt would be not rapt, but rapted.] To ravish; to put in ecstacy.

You may safe approve,
How strong in infatigation to their love
Their raptures tunes are. Chapman's Odyssey.

RAPT. n. f. [from rap.] A trance; an ecstacy.

RAPTURE. n. f.

1. Ecstacy; transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.

Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. Addison's Spectator, N° 406.

You grow correct, that once with rapture writ. Pope.

RAR

2. Rapidity; haste.

The wat'ry throng,
Wave rowling after wave, where way they found,
If steep, with torrent rapture; if through plain Soft-ebbing; not withheld them rock or hill. Milton.

RA'PTURED. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported.

A bad word.

He drew
Such madning draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while cancell'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson's Summer.

RA'PTUROUS. adj. [from rapture.] Ecstasick; transporting.

Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous? is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.

RARE. adj. [rarius, Lat. rare, Fr. in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon.

Live to be the show, and gaze o' th' time;
We'll have you, as our rare moulters are, Shakefp.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.

This jealousy
Is for a precious creature; as the's rare,
Must it be great, and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

On which was wrought the gods and giants fight,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight. Cowley.

Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.

3. Thinly feathered.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
Patturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.

They are of so tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon's Natural History.

So eagerly the fiend
O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way. Milt.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opticks.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.

5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire. This is often pronounced rear.

New-laid eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RA'RESHOW. n. f. [this word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rareshow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.

Of rarefactions he sung, and Punch's feats. Gog.

RA'REFACTION. n. f. [rarefactio, Fr. from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before; contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rarefaction resolved into wind, will force up the smoke. Hutton's Architecture.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be strained, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnet.

RA'REFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

To RA'REFY. v. a. [rarefier, Fr. rarus and facie, Lat. rarefy were more proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more
The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden's Fables.

RA'RELY. adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie
Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. Dryden's Juven.

Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakefp.

RA'RENESS. n. f. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touched there; for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rareness of touch doth further. Bacon.

RAS

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition, I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make;
Accept it as when early fruit we fend,
And let the rareness the small gift commend. Dryden.

2. Value arising from scarcity.

Roles set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use. Bacon.

To worthiest things,
Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.

RA'RITY. n. f. [raritas, Fr. raritas, Lat.]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

So far from being fond of any one for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spectator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.

Sorrow would be a rarity most belov'd,
If all could so become it. Shakefp. King Lear.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one shew us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the place. Addison.

3. Thinness; subtlety; the contrary to density.

Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley's Sermons.

RA'SCAL. n. f. [rascal, Saxon, a lean beast.] A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a sorry wretch.

For the rascal commons, left he cared,
And when him lit the rascal routs appeal,
Men into stones therewith he could translew. Fa. Queen.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends:
Be ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. ii.

But for our gentlemen,
The mouse ne'er than'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakefp.

I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath remov'd my horse. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals. L'Estr.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay inug to snap young Damon's goat? Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden's Persius.

The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rascal. Sw.

RASCA'LION. n. f. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame
Us'd him so like a base rascalion,
That old pig—what d'ye call him—malion,
That cut his mistress out of stone,
Had not so hard a hearted one. Hadibras, p. i.

RASCA'LITY. n. f. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs. Glanville's Scyll.

Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RA'SCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.

Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame. Shakefp.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and fconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time. Swift.

To RASE. v. a. [this word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perstringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; raser, Fr. raser, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He certifies your lordships, that this night
He dreamt the boar had ras'd off his helm. Shakefp.

Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that ras'd his cheek, have gone into his head. South's Sermons.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.

Her battering engines bent to rase some city. Milton.

To blot out by rasure; to erase.

Though of their names in heav'nly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and ras'd. Milton.

RASH. adj. [rash, Dutch.] Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit. Afchan's Schoolmaster.

RAT

Blasht her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rat mood is on me. Shakep.

I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rat. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.
Be not rat with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Ecluf.
Her rat hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, the cat. Milton.

RASH. n. f. [rafia, Italian.] An effluence on the body; a breaking out. Minibev.

2. [Corrupted probably from rafia.] An effluence on the body; a breaking out.

RA'SHER. n. f. [rafura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.
If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rafher on the coals for money. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rafhers of fird' bacon on the coals. Dryden.
Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rafher from the coals. King.

RA'SHLY. adv. [from raf.] Haphily; violently; without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rafily plotted. Shakep. Henry VI. p. i.
Men are not rafily to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon's Natural History.

He that doth any thing rafily, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estrange's Fables.

Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly base to injure Phadras,
So rafily brave to dare the sword of Thebeus. Smith.

RA'SHNESS. n. f. [from raf.] Foolish contempt of danger;
inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rafness. Hooker, b. iii. f. 6.

Nature to youth hot rafness doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence. Denham.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth; yet we offend not properly by falshood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rafness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.

The vain Morat by his own rafness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,
Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryden.

RA'SP. n. f. [raspo, Italian.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.

Sorrel set amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller.
Bacon's Natural History.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philips.

To RASP. v. a. [rasper, Dutch; rasper, Fr. raspare, Italian.]
To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wise's Surgery.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes. Moxon.

RASP. n. f. [from the verb.] A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.

Cafe-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and cafe-hardened. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

RA'SPATORY. n. f. [raspatoir, Fr. from rasp.] A surgeon's rasp.

I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauterics burnt it to a crust. Wise's Surgery.

RA'SPBERRY, or Rasberry. n. f. A kind of berry.
Rasberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RASPBERRY-BUSH. n. f. A species of bramble.
RA'SURE. n. f. [rafura, Lat.]

1. The act of scraping or shaving.
2. A mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.
Such a writing ought to be free from any vituperation of rafure. Ayliffe's Paragon.

RAT. n. f. [ratte, Dutch; rat, Fr. ratta, Spanish.] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane. Shakep.
Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shakep.

I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows tip like rats. Shakep.
Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly. Dennis.

RAT

To snell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

Quoth Hudibras, I snell a rat, Hudibras, p. i.
Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate.

RA'TABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.
The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ores per oras; I collect out of the abby-book of Burton, that twenty ores were ratable to two marks of silver. Camden's Remains.

RA'TABLY. adv. Proportionably.
Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance. Ralegh.

RATA'FIA. n. f. A fine liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits. Bailly.

RATA'N. n. f. An Indian cane.
RATCH. n. f. In clockwork, a sort of wheel, which serves RASH: } to lift up the detents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike. Bailly.

RATE. n. f. [ratu, Lat. rate, old Fr.]
1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected? Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,
To buy an empire at so base a rate. Dryden.

The price of land has never changed, in the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.

2. Allowance settled.
His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day. 2 Kings xxv. 30.

They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments. Addison.

3. Degree; comparative height or valour.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shakep.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
'Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate. Shakep. Merchant of Venice.

In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other mens, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy's Sermons.

To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is norally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.

4. Quantity assignable.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shakep.

5. That which sets value.
Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserved to have the tongue cut out. South's Sermons.

A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.
Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough. Clarendon, b. viii.

Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Addison.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.
They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.

To RATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see How much I was a braggart. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.

We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentrate into felicity. Boyle.

You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.

2. [Rata, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.
Go rate thy minions, proud insulting toy,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakep. Henry VI. p. iii.

An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, Sir. Shakep. Henry IV. p. i.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his conscience shall take him aside and rate him by himself. South.

RAT

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.

RATH. n. f. A hill. I know not whence derived.
There is a great use among the Irish, to make great af-semblies together upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons. Spenser on Ireland.

RATH. adv. Early.
Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all too rath,
The ear, that budded fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenser.

Strong Lagean wines
Rath ripe and purple grapes there be. Moy's Virgil.

Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden some, and some of purple rind. Moy's Virgil.

RATH. adj. [rað, Saxon, quickly.] Early; coming before the time.

Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.

RA'THER. adv. [this is a comparative from rath; rað, Saxon, soon. Now out of use. One may fill say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]

1. More willingly; with better liking.
Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.
'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undetermined who such heir is. Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.
He fought through the world, but fought in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd his slain. Dryden.

4. More properly.
This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but The art itself is nature. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

5. Especially.
You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shakep.

6. To have RATHER. [this is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impetuosity to apply the discipline of severity and correction; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Regent's Sermons.

RATIFICATION. n. f. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.

RA'TIFIER. n. f. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.

They cry, "chuse we Laertes for our king."
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakep.

To RA'TIFY. v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.] To confirm; to settle.

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.

To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shakep.

We have ratified unto them the borders of Judaea. 1 Mac.
God ratified their prayers by the judgment they brought down upon the head of him, whom they prayed against.

Tell me, my friend, from whence had'st thou the skill,
So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.

RA'TIO. n. f. [Latin.] Proportion.
Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

To RATIOCINATE. v. n. [ratiocinor, Lat.] To reason;
to argue.

RATIOCINATION. n. f. [ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of ratiocination. Brown.

Can any kind of ratio allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.

Such an inscription would be self-evident without any ra-tification or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.

RAT

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from ratiocinare.] Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some conclusions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of *ratio*cinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

RA'TIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Latin.]
1. Having the power of reasoning.

2. Agreeable to reason.
What higher in her society thou find'st Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.

When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glauvill.

If your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic part swallow up the rational. Swift.

3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.
RATIONAL'LE. n. f. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons:
as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.

RA'TIONALIST. n. f. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store:
the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.

RATIONALITY. n. f. [from rational.]
1. The power of reasoning.
When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Gov. of the Tong.

2. Reasonableness.
In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RA'TIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.

RATIONALNESS. n. f. [from rational.] The state of being rational.

RA'TSBANE. n. f. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.
Poor Tom! that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew; set ratbane by his porridge. Shakep.

He would throw ratbane up and down a house, where children might come at it. L'Estrange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found pois'ning trick of France;
And when their art of ratbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot. Dryden.

I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but fack might do it, though ratbane would not. Swift to Pope.

RA'TTLE. n. f. A kind of stuff.
We'll rig in March-freet Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in rattle. Swift.

To RA'TTLE. v. n. [ratteln, Dutch.]
1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.

The quiver rattled against him. Job xxxix. 23.
The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nah. iii. 2.

They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell;
He fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden.

There she assembles all her blackest storms,
And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addison.

2. To speak eagerly and noisily.
With jealous eyes at distance she had seen Whip'ring with Jove the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an af-fector of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery. Swift.

To RA'TTLE. v. a.
1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.
Her chains she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.

2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakep.

He should be well enough able to scatter the Irish as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon's Henry VII.

RAV

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.
Hearing Rafop had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for robbing his house.
She that would sometimes rattle off her servants pretty sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took any notice.
Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- RA'TTLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick noise, slightly repeated.
I'll hold ten pound my dream is out;
I'd tell it you but for the rattle
Of those confounded drums.
2. Empty and loud talk.
All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit.
3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.
The rattles of Isis and the cymbals of Bractea nearly enough resemble each other.
They had, to affront the enemies' horses, big rattles covered with parchment and small stones within.
Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them.
They want no rattles for their froward mood,
Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food.
Farewell then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What right, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care; for this is all.
4. A plant.
RA'TTLEHEADED. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.
RA'TTLESNAKE. n. f. A kind of serpent.
The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail.
She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake.
RATTLESNAKE. n. f.
Rattlesnake root, called also feneka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake: it has been recommended in all cases, in which the blood is known to be thick and fizy.
RA'TROON. n. f. A West Indian fox, which has this peculiar property, that if any thing be offered to it that has lain in water, it will wipe and turn it about with its fore feet, before it will put it to its mouth.
TO RAVAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.
Already Caesar
Has ravaged more than half the globe, and fees
Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword.
His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill,
The shatter'd forests, and the ravag'd vale.
RAVAGE. n. f. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.
Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise,
To view the mighty ravage of your eyes.
Would one think 'twere possible for love
To make such ravage in a noble soul.
These ravages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts.
RA'VAGER. n. f. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.
When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers.
RA'VCRITY. n. f. [ravatus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.
Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an increase of sweetness; as in the purling of a wreathed string, and in the ravacity of a trumpet.
TO RAVE. v. n. [reuer, Dutch; réver, Fr.]
1. To be delicious; to talk rationally.
Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such.
It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving.
Her grief has wrought her into frenzy,
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed:
Sometimes the raves for musick, light and air;
Nor air, nor light nor musick calm her pains.
2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.
Shall these wild distempers of thy mind,
This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find
No opposition?
Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and to no purpose.
Wonder at my patience,
Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted.

RAV

- Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,
I'll cry for vengeance.
He swore he could not leave me,
With ten thousand ravings.
3. To be unreasonably fond. With upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.
Another partiality is a fantastical and wild attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires.
TO RAVEL. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]
1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.
As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me.
If then such praise the Maccaronian got,
For having rudely cut the Gordian knot;
What glory's due to him that could divide
Such ravel'd interests, has the knot untied,
And without stroke so smooth a passage made,
Where craft and malice such obstructions laid.
2. To unweave; to unknot: as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.
Let him for a pair of recchy kisses,
Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out.
Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care.
3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.
They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of them fingle, seem harsh to them.
TO RAVEL. v. n.
1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.
Give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution;
Till by their own perplexities involv'd,
They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self-satisfying solution.
2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.
It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances.
The humour of ravelling into all these mythical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes.
RAVELIN. n. f. [French.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courtines or counterescarpments.
RA'VENS. n. f. [hæpæn, Saxon.] A large black fowl.
The raven himself is hoarse
That creaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements.
Come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter than snow upon a raven's back.
I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers.
He made the greedy ravens to be Elias' caterers, and bring him food.
On several parts a several praise bestows,
The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek.
The raven once in snowy plumes was drest,
White as the whitest dove's unfly'd breast,
His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite
To sooty blackness from the purest white.
TO RAVEN. v. a. [hæpæn, Saxon, to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.
Thriftless ambition! that will raven up Thine own life's means.
Like rats that raven down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.
That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravens first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage.
There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravens the prey.
TO RAVEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.
Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil.
The Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup; but their inward part is full of ravens and wickedness.
They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravens and a roaring lion.

RAW

- The more they fed, they raw'd still for more,
They drain'd from Dan, and left Beer-sheba poor;
But when some lay-preference fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance.
Convulsions rack man's nerves and cares his breast,
His flying life is chas'd by rawning pains.
Through all his doubles in the winding veins.
RA'VENOUS. adj. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.
Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd and ravenous.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remoté,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses.
That nurs'd me, watch! my fickle! oh she watch'd me,
As raw vultures watch the dying lion.
RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.
RA'VENOUSNESS. n. f. [from ravenous.] Rage for prey; furious voracity.
The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence.
RAUGHT. the old pret. and part. pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.
His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought.
And that as soon as ripe years he raught,
He might, for memory of that day's ruth,
Be called Ruddyman.
In like delights of bloody game,
He trained was till ripe years he raught,
And there about whiff't any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest.
This staff of honour raught, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand.
The hand of death has raught him.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schenden, violently raught from his head his rich cap of fables, and with his horsemen took him.
RA'VIN. n. f. [from raven; this were better written raven.]
1. Prey; food gotten by violence.
The lion strangled for his lioness, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.
To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best; where most with ravin I may meet.
2. Rapine; rapaciousness.
They might not lie long in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape.
RA'VINGLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.
In this depth of mutes and divers sorts of discourses, would the ravings have remained.
TO RAVISH. v. a. [ravis, Fr.]
1. To constitute by force.
They ravish'd the women and maids.
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her.
2. To take away by violence.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee.
Their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps.
I owe myself the care,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite;
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right.
3. To delight to ravish; to transport.
Thou hast ravish'd my heart.
Be thou ravish'd always with her love.
RA'VISHED. n. f. [ravish, Fr. from ravish.]
1. He that embraces a woman by violence.
They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children.
A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if she desire it.
Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn ravisher to keep you here.
2. One who takes any thing by violence.
Shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare.
RAVISHMENT. n. f. [ravishment, Fr. from ravish.]
1. Violation; forcible conjunction.
Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of

RAW

- men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries.
Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens.
I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment.
2. Transport; rapture; ecstacy; pleasing violence on the mind.
All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze.
Thee all things gaze on,
With ravishment beheld!
Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment.
What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possessed, ran naked up and down.
RAW. adj. [Threap, Saxon; raa, Danish; rauw, Dutch.]
1. Not subdued by the fire.
Full of great lumps of flesh, and goblets raw.
2. Not covered with the skin.
All about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's faw;
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw.
If there be quick raw flesh in the rifings, it is an old leprosy.
3. Sore.
This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his finews waxen weak and raw
Through long imprisonment.
4. Immature; unripe.
5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.
Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and unfully nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred.
People, while young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God.
Sails were spread to ev'ry wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new.
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war.
6. New. This seems to be the meaning.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw ticks of these bragging jacks.
7. Black; chill.
They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate.
Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatic day.
Once upon a raw and guffy day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores,
God help thee, shallow man; God make Incision in thee, thou art raw.
8. Not concocted.
Distilled waters will last longer than raw waters.
RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.
Lean rawbon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage.
The wolf was content to barter away a rawboned carcass for a smooth and fat one.
RA'WHEAD. n. f. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children:
Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage permit
Rawhead and bloody bones, and hands and feet, Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes drest.
Serving as children, and keep them in subjection, by telling them of rawhead and bloody bones.
RA'WLY. adv. [from raw.]
1. In a raw manner.
2. Unskillfully.
3. Newly.
Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left.
RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]
1. State of being raw.
Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water.
2. Unskillfulness.
Charles V. considering the rawness of his seamen, established a pilot major for their examination.
3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage.
Why in that rawness left he wife and children, Without leave taking.

REA

RAY, n. f. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]

1. A beam of light.
These eyes that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn.
The least light, or part of light, which may be stopp'd alone, or do or suffer any thing alone, which the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light.
2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.
The air sharpen'd his visual ray.

3. [Rays, Fr. raie, Lat.] A fish.
4. [Lolium, Lat.] An herb.
To RAY, v. a. [raye, Fr. from the noun.] To streak; to mark in long lines. An old word.
Beside a bubbling fountain low the lay,
Which she increased with her bleeding heart,
And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Ta. 2y.
His horse is rayed with the yellows.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever men so rayed? was ever man so weary?

- RAY, for array.
RAZE, n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written race, but less properly.
I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered.
To RAZE, v. a. [raiser, Fr. rasus, Lat.] See RASE.

1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.
Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed.
He yokeeth your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns.
It grieved the tyrant, that so base a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze it.
Shed christian blood, and populous cities raze;
Because they're taught to use some different phrase.

2. To efface.
Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Razing the characters of your renown.
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain.
He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words.

3. To extirpate.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family.
RA'ZOR, n. f. [razor, Lat.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded.
These words are razors to my wounded heart.
Those thy boisterous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdued.
All our lords are by his wealth outw'd,
Whole razor on my callow beard was try'd.
Razor makers generally clap a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor.
RA'ZORABLE, adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.
New-born chins be rough and razorable.

- RA'ZORISH, n. f.
The sheath or razorish resembles in length and bigness a man's finger.
RA'ZURE, n. f. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Latin.] Act of erasing.
Oh! your desert speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of brass
A forced resistance, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion.

- RE, Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action: as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back.

- REA'CESS, n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the recess of the sun. Hakewill.
To REACH, v. a. ancient preterite raught. [necan, Saxon.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.
What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to rise and reach
Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scaffolding
Of scepters, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.
Round the tree
They longing stood, but could not reach.
O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the beast.

3. Extent.
The coast so long desir'd
Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent.
What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom.
It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
He reached me a full cup.
To bring forward from a distant place.
Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side.
To hold out; to stretch forth.
These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them.
When thou fittest among many, reach not thine hand out first.

5. To attain; to gain; to obtain.
The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, comes short of its reality.
To transfer.
Through such hands
The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man.

6. To penetrate to.
Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception.
To be adequate to.
The law reached the intention of the promoters, and this act fixed the natural price of money.
If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine.

7. To extend to.
Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame.
Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death.
To extend; to spread abroad.
Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs.

8. To reach, v. n.
To be extended.
We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach.
The new world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropic to the other.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther.
If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave.
The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason.

9. To be extended far.
Great men have reaching hands.
To penetrate.
He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage, that reacheth up into heaven.
We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time.
To make efforts to attain.
Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity.

10. To take in the hand.
Left he reach of the tree of life, and eat.
REACH, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Act of reaching or bringing by extension of the hand.
2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.
There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open.
3. Power of attainment or management.
In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him.
4. Power, limit of faculties.
Our fight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe.
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste and learning go.
5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.
Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches.
6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.
The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.
7. Tendency to distant consequences.
Strain not my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.

REA

REACTION, n. f. [from react, Lat.]

1. The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world; and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd.
To REACT, v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.
The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly.
Cut off your hand, and you may do
With t'other hand the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts.

- REACTION, n. f. [from react, Fr. from reac.] The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.
Do not great bodies conferve their heat the longest, their parts heating one another; and may not great, dense and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflexion and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain period of heat, such as is that of the sun?
Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them.

- REACTION, n. f. [react, Saxon; reac, Dutch.]
1. Council.
The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear.
2. Saying; law. This word is in both senses obsolete.
This read is rife that oftentime
Great cumbres fall unsoft,
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trade is not to tickle.

3. To read, v. a. pret. read, part. pass. read. [raes, Saxon.]
To READ, v. n.
1. To peruse any thing written.
I have seen her take forth paper, write upon't, read it, and afterwards seal it.
The passage you must have read, though since flit out of your memory.
If we have not leisure to read over the book itself regularly, then by the titles of chapters we may be directed to peruse several sections.
To discover by characters or marks.
An armed corse did lie,
In whose dead face he read great unanimity.
To learn by observation.
Those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honour.

2. To know fully.
O most delicate friend!
Who is't can read a woman?
To READ, v. n.
1. To perform the act of perusing writing.
It shall be with him, and he shall read therein, that he may learn to fear the Lord.
2. To be studious in books.
This is the sure that Fleury reads.
3. To know by reading.
I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence.
We have a poet among us, of a genius as exalted as his stature, and who is very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning the sublime.

- REA'DING, n. f. [from read.]
1. Study in books; perusal of books.
Though reading and conversation may furnish us with many ideas of men and things, yet it is our own meditation must form our judgment.
Let's reading dis... makes felons scape,
Less human genius than God gives an ape,
Can make a Ciber.
2. A lecture; a prelection.
3. Public recital.
The Jews always had their weekly readings of the law.
Give attendance to reading, exhortation and doctrine.

4. Variation of copies.
That learned prelate has restored some of the readings of the authors with great sagacity.
REA'DPTION, n. f. [re and adaption, Latin.] Recovery; act of regaining.
Will any say, that the redemption of Trevigi was matter of scruple?
REA'DER, n. f. [from read.]
1. One that peruses any thing written.

2. One that reads.
The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear.
This word is in both senses obsolete.
This read is rife that oftentime
Great cumbres fall unsoft,

3. To know by reading.
I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence.
We have a poet among us, of a genius as exalted as his stature, and who is very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning the sublime.

- REA'DING, n. f. [from read.]
1. Study in books; perusal of books.
Though reading and conversation may furnish us with many ideas of men and things, yet it is our own meditation must form our judgment.
Let's reading dis... makes felons scape,
Less human genius than God gives an ape,
Can make a Ciber.
2. A lecture; a prelection.
3. Public recital.
The Jews always had their weekly readings of the law.
Give attendance to reading, exhortation and doctrine.

REA

- As we must take the care that our words and sense be clear, so if the obscurity happen through the hearers or readers want of understanding, I am not to answer for them. B. Johnson.
2. One studious in books.
Bairis' altars and the dire decrees
Of hard Euthelus, ev'ry reader fees.

3. One whose office is to read prayers in churches.
He got into orders, and became a reader in a parish church at twenty pounds a year.
REA'DERSHIP, n. f. [from reader.] The office of reading prayers.
When they have taken a degree, they get into orders, and solicit a readership.

- REA'DILY, adv. [from ready.] Expeditely; with little hindrance or delay.
My tongue obey'd, and readily could name
Whatever I saw.
Those very things, which are declined as impossible, are readily practicable in a case of extreme necessity.

- I readily grant, that one truth cannot contradict another.
Every one sometime of other dreams that he is reading papers, in which case the invention prompts to readily, that the mind is imposed upon.
REA'DINESS, n. f. [from ready.]
1. Expediteness; promptitude.
He would not forget the readiness of their king, in aiding him when the duke of Bretagne failed him.

2. The state of being ready or fit for any thing.
Have you an army ready?
—The centurions and their charges already in the entertainment to be on foot at an hour's warning.
—I am joyful to hear of their readiness.

3. Facility; freedom from hindrance or obstruction.
Nature has provided for the readiness and easiness of speech.
4. State of being willing or prepared.
A pious and well-disposed mind, attended with a readiness to obey the known will of God, is the surest means to enlighten the understanding to a belief of christianity.

- REA'DMISSION, n. f. [re and admission.] The act of admitting again.
In an exhausted receiver, animals, that seem as they were dead, revive upon the readmission of fresh air.
To REA'DMIT, v. a. [re and admit.] To let in again.
These evils I deserve,
Yet despair not of his final pardon,
Whose ear is ever open, and his eye
Gracious to readmit the suppliant.

- REA'DORN, v. a. [re

REA

5. Being at the point; not distant; near; about to do or be. He knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at hand. Job.
Satan ready now
To stoop with weary'd wings and willing feet
On this world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
6. Being at hand; next to hand. A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground, The ready weapon that his fury found. Dryden.
7. Facile; easy; opportune; near. Sometimes the ready way, which a wife man hath to conquer, is to fly. Hooker's Preface.

The race elect,
Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance
Through the wild desert, not the ready way. Milton.
Proud of their conquest, prouder of their prey,
They leave the camp, and take the ready way. Dryden.
The ready way to be thought mad, is to contend that you are not so. Speator, N° 577.

8. Quick; not done with hesitation. A ready consent often subjects a woman to contempt. Clarissa.

9. Expedite; nimble; not embarrassed; not slow. Those, who speak in publick, are much better accepted, when they can deliver their discourse by the help of a lively genius and a ready memory, than when they are forced to read all. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
10. To make READY. To make preparations. He will shew you a large upper room; there make ready for us. Mar. xiv. 15.

READY. adv. Readily; so as not to need delay. We will go ready armed before the children of Israel. Nun.
READY. n. f. Ready money. A low word. Lord Strutt was not flush in ready, either to go to law, or clear old debts. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
REAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [re and affirmance.] Second confirmation.

Causes of deprivation are a conviction before the ordinary of a wilful maintaining any doctrine contrary to the thirteenth articles, or a persisting therein without revocation of his error, or a reaffirmance after such revocation. Ayliffe.

- REAL. adj. [reel, Fr. realis, Latin.]
1. Relating to things not persons; not personal. Many are perfect in men's humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business; which is the constitution of one that hath studied men more than books. Bacon.

2. Not fictitious; not imaginary; true; genuine. We do but describe an imaginary world, that is but little a-kin to the real one. Glarvill's Scyll.

When I place an imaginary name at the head of a character, I examine every letter of it, that it may not bear any resemblance to one that is real. Addison.

3. In law, consisting of things immovable, as land. I am hastening to convert my small estate, that is personal, into real. Child's Discourse of Trade.

REALGAR. n. f. A mineral. Realgar or sandarach is red arsenick. Harris.

Put realgar hot into the midst of the quicksilver, whereby it may be condensed as well from within as without. Bacon.

REALITY. n. f. [realité, Fr. from real.]
1. Truth; verity; what is, not what merely seems. I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man fancies that he understands a critic, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning. Addison's Spectator, N° 291.

The best accounts of the appearances of nature in any single instance human penetration can reach, comes infinitely short of its reality and internal constitution; for who can search out the Almighty's works to perfection? Cheyne.

2. Something intrinsically important; not merely matter of show. Of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows,
Made so adorn for thy delight the more. Milton.

To REALIZE. v. a. [realiser, Fr. from real.]
1. To bring into being or act. Thus we realize what Archimedes had only in hypothesis, weighing a single grain against the globe of earth. Glarvill.

As a Diocesan, you are like to exemplify and realize every word of this discourse. South.

2. To convert money into land. REALLY. adv. [from real.]

1. With actual existence. There cannot be a more important case of conscience for men to be resolved in, than to know certainly how far God accepts the will for the deed, and how far he does not; and to be informed truly when men do really will a thing, and when they have really no power to do, what they have willed. South.

2. In truth; truly; not seemingly. The understanding represents to the will things really evil, under the notion of good. South.

REA

These orators inflame the people, whose anger is really but a short fit of madness. Swift.

3. It is a slight corroboration of an opinion. Why really fifty-five is somewhat old. Young.

REALM. n. f. [roiaume, French.]
1. A kingdom; a king's dominion. Is there any part of that realm, or any nation therein, which have not yet been subdued to the crown of England. Spenser.

They had gather'd a wife council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business. Shakspeare.

A son whose worthy deeds
Raise him to be the second in that realm. Milton.

2. Kingly government. This sense is not frequent. Learn each small people's genius, policies,
The ant's republick, and the realm of bees. Pope.

REALTY. n. f. [a word peculiar, I believe, to Milton.]
Really means not in this place reality in opposition to show; but loyalty; for the Italian Dictionary explains the adjective reale by loyal. Pearce on Milton.

O heaven, that such resemblance of the highest Should yet remain, where faith and really Remain not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

REAM. n. f. [ream, Fr. riem, Dutch.] A bundle of paper containing twenty quires. All vain petitions mounting to the sky,
With reams abundant this abode supply. Pope.

To REANIMATE. v. a. [re and animo, Lat.] To revive; to restore to life. We are our reanimated ancestors, and antedate their resurrection. Glarvill's Scyll.

The young man left his own body breathless on the ground, while that of the doe was reanimated. Speator, N° 578.

To REANNE'X. v. a. [re and annex.] To annex again. King Charles was not a little inflamed with an ambition to repurchase and reannex that dutchy. Bacon's Henry VII.

To REAP. v. a. [repan, Saxon.]
1. To cut corn at harvest. From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakspeare.

When ye reap the harvest, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field. Lev. xix. 9.

The hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, is kept back by fraud. Ja. v. 5.

Is it fitting in this very field,
Where I so oft have reap'd, so oft have till'd,
That I should die for a deserter? Gay.

2. To gather; to obtain. They that love the religion which they profess, may have failed in choice, but yet they are sure to reap what benefit the same is able to afford. Hooker.

What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it? Shak.

This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap,
Being much spoke of. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.

To REAP. v. n. To harvest. They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Psal. cxvii. 5.

REAPER. n. f. [from reap.] One that cuts corn at harvest. Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are muliters, people
Ingroft by swift impress. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

From hungry reapers they their sheaves withhold. Sand.

Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand,
And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand. Pope.

A thousand forms he wears,
And first a reaper from the field appears,
Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain Overcharge the shoulders of the seeming swain. Pope.

REAPINGHOOK. n. f. [reaping and hook.] A hook used to cut corn in harvest. Some are briv'd to vow it looks Most plainly done by thieves with reapinghooks. Dryden.

REAR. n. f. [arrière, French.]
1. The hinder troop of an army, or the hinder line of a fleet. The rear admiral, an arch pirate, was afterwards slain with a great shot. Knutles's History of the Turks.

Argive chiefs
Fled from his well-known face, with wonted fear,
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the rear. Dryden.

Snowy headed winter leads,
Yellow autumn brings the rear. Waller.

2. The last class. Coins I place in the rear, because made up of both the other. Peachment.

REAR. adj. [hnepe, Saxon.]
1. Raw; half roasted; half sodden. 2. Early. A provincial word. O'er yonder hill does scant the dawn appear, Then why does Cuddy leave his cot to rear? Gay.

To REAR.

REA

To REAR. v. a. [arajan, Saxon.]

1. To raise up. All the people shouted with a loud voice, for the rearing up of the house of the Lord. 1 Esdr. v. 62.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes. Milton.

2. To lift up from a fall. Down again the fell unto the ground,
But he her quickly rear'd up again. Fa. Queen, b. i.

In adoration at his feet I fell Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

3. To move upwards. Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round. Milton.

4. To bring up to maturity. No creature goeth to generate, whilst the female is busy in fitting or rearing her young. Bacon's Natural History.

They were a very hardy breed, and rear'd their young ones without any care. Martinet's Husbandry.

They flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd
A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves. Thomson.

5. To educate; to instruct. He wants a father to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. Southern.

They have in every town publick nurseries, where all parents, except cottagers and labourers, are obliged to send their infants to be rear'd and educated. Swift.

6. To exalt; to elevate. Charity decent, modest, easy, kind, Softens the high, and rears the abject mind. Prior.

7. To rouse; to stir up. Into the naked woods he goes,
And seeks the tusk'd boar to rear,
With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear. Dryden.

REARWARD. n. f. [from rear.]
1. The last troop. He from the beginning began to be in the rearward, and before they left fighting, was too far off. Sidney.

The standard of Dan was the rearward of the camp. Nun.

2. The end; the tail; a train behind. Why follow'd not, when the said Tybalt's dead, Thy father or thy mother?
But with a rearward following Tybalt's death, Romeo is banished. Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

3. The latter part. In contempt. He was ever in the rearward of the fashion. Shakspeare.

REARMOUSE. n. f. [more properly reremouse; hnenemu, Sax.]
The leather-winged bat. Some war with rear mice for their leathern wings
To make my small elves coats. Shakspeare.

Of flying fishes, the wings are not feathers, but a thin kind of skin, like the wings of a bat or rearmouse. Abbott.

To REASCE'ND. v. n. [re and ascend.] To climb again. When as the day the heaven doth adorn,
I with that night the noyous day would end
And when as night hath us of light forlorn,
I with that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.

Taught by the heav'nly muse to venture down
The dark descent, and up to reascend.
These puissant legions, whose exile
Hath empty'd heav'n, shall fall to reascend, Self-raisd, and repossess their native seat? Milton.

To REASCE'ND. v. a. To mount again. When the god his fury had allay'd, He mounts aloft, and reascends the skies. Addison.

REASON. n. f. [raison, Fr. ratio, Lat.]
1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty. Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.

Though brutish that contest and foul,
When reason hath to deal with force; yet so
Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers,
Is reason to the soul: and as on high,
Those rowling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turn'd by his interests, his passions and his vices. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Cause; ground or principle. Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness. Tillotson.

REA

3. Cause efficient. Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bac.

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Helle.

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been overruled to approach this place. Spenser.

I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.

4. Final cause. Reason, in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause: but here for a faculty in man. Locke.

5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive. I make the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

6. Ratiocination; discursive power. When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of reason she obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, she understanding is. Davies.

7. Clearness of faculties. Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shap'ing fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakspeare.

When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

8. Right; justice. I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

Are you in earnest?
Ay, and retolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right. Shakspeare.

The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillingfleet.

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden.

9. Reasonable claim; just practice. God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.

Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.

A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden's Dedication to Aurengzebe.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have. Tillotson's Preface.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

10. Rationale; just account. To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.

11. Moderation; moderate demands. The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.

To REASON. v. n. [raisonner, Fr.]
1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises. No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.

Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.

Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition. Addison.

In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong,
Clear'd some great truth. Titchell.

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use. Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shakspeare.

REA

*I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the narrow seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country.* Shaksp.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Sam. xii. 7.
3. To raise disquisitions; to make enquiries.
Jefus, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts? Luke v. 22.

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate. Milton.
Already by thy reasoning this I guefs,
Who art to lead thy offspring; and fuppoft,
That bodies bright and greater fhould not ferve
The lefs not bright. Milton.
Down reason then, at leaft vain reasoning down. Milt.
To REA'SON. v. a. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of fpeech.

When they are clearly difcovered, well digefted, and well reasoned in every part, there is beauty in fuch a theory. Burn.
REASONABLE. adj. [raifon, Fr.]

1. Having the faculty of reason; endued with reason.
She perceived her only fon lay hurt, and that his hurt was fo deadly, as that already his life had loft ufe of the reasonable and almoft fenfible part. Sidney.

2. Acting, fpeaking or thinking rationally:
The parliament was diffolved, and gentlemen furnifhed with fuch forces, as were held fufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward.

3. Juft; rational; agreeable to reason.
A law may be reasonable in itfelf, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.
Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable fwiftnels add
More feathers to our wings. Shaksp. Henry V.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.
I could with reasonable good manner receive the falutation of her and of the princefs Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one princefs oweth to another. Sidney.

A good way diftant from the nigra rupes, there are four feveral lands of reasonable quantity. Abbot's Defcr. of the World.
Notwithstanding thefe defects, the Englifh colonies maintained themfelves in a reasonable good eftate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies on Ireland.

REASONABLENESS. n. f. [from reasonable.]
1. The faculty of reason.
2. Agreeablenefs to reason.

They thought the work would be better done, if thofe, who had fatifhed themfelves with the reasonablenefs of what they wifh, would undertake the converting and difpofing of other men. Clarendon.

The paffive reason, which is more properly reasonablenefs, is that order and congruity which is impreffed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonablenefs in it, the paffive impreffion of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artift. Hale.

3. Moderation.
REASONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]
1. Agreeably to reason.

Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjuft in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden's Preface to Fables.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.
Some man reasonably ftudied in the law, fhould be perfuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

If we can by induftry make our deaf and dumb perfons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the fame privilege of underftanding by the eye what is fpoken. Helder's Elements of Speech.

REASONER. n. f. [raisonneur, Fr. from reason.] One who reafons; an arguer.

Due reverence pay
To learn'd Epicurus; fee the way
By which this reafner of fo high renown Moves through th' ecliptick road the rolling fun. Blackm.

The terms are loofe and undefined; and what lefs becomes a fair reafner, he puts wrong and invidious names on every thing to colour a falfe way of arguing. Addifon.

Thofe reafners, who employ fo much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in Chriftendom, by their practices are endeavouring to deftroy it at home. Swift.

REASONING. n. f. [from reason.] Argument.
Thofe who would make ufe of folid arguments and ftrong reasonings to a reader of fo delicate a turn, would be like that foolifh people, who worfhiped a fly, and facrificed an ox to it.
Addifon's Freeholder, N° 32.

REASONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.
This profler is abfurd and reasonlefs. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

Is it
Her true perfection, or my falfe tranfgreffion,
That makes me reasonlefs to reason thus? Shaksp.

That they wholly direct the reasonlefs mind, I am refolved;
for all thofe which were created mortal, as birds and beafts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh's Hift. of the World.

REB

Thefe reasons in love's law have paff for good,
Though fond and reasonlefs to fome. Milton's Agonifte.
To REASS'ABLE. v. a. [re and affinable.] To collect anew.
There reaffinable our afflicted pow'rs,
Consult how to offend our enemy. Milton.

To REASS'ET. v. a. [re and affert.] To affert anew; to

To REBA'TIZE. v. a. [rebaptif, Fr. re and baptize.] To baptize again.

Underftanding that the rites of the church were obferved, he approved of their baptifm, and would not fuffer them to be rebaptized. Ayliffe's Parergon.

REBAPTIZA'TION. n. f. [rebaptifation, Fr. from rebaptize.]
Renewal of baptifm.

In maintenance of rebaptization, their arguments are built upon this, that heretics are not any part of the church of Chrift. Hooker, b. iii. f. i.

To REBA'TE. v. n. [rebatre, Fr.] To blunt; to beat to ob-tufenefs; to deprive of keennefs.

He doth rebat and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, ftudy and faft. Shaksp.

The icy goat, the crab which fquare the fcales;
With thofe of art's true confent to hate
The fcales of libra, and her rays rebat. Creech.

He modifies his fift fevere decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebat,
The troops for honour fighting, not for hate. Dryden.

My flagging foul flies under her own pitch,
My fenfes too are dull and ftupify'd,
Their edge rebat. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Their innocence unfeign'd long joys afford

TO RECOLLECT. v. a. [recollatus, Lat.]
1. To recover to memory.
It did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy paced times. Shakespeare.
Recollest every day the things seen, heard, or read, which made any addition to your understanding. Watts's Logic.
2. To recover reason or resolution.
The Tyrian queen
Admir'd his fortunes, more admir'd the man;
Then recollected stood. Dryden's Æneis.
3. To gather what is scattered; to gather again.
Now that God hath made his light radiate in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
RECOLLECTION. n. f. [from recollect.] Recovery of notion; revival in the memory.
Recollection is when an idea is fought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view. Locke.

REC

- Let us take care that we sleep not without such a recollection of the actions of the day as may represent any thing that is remarkable, as matter of sorrow or thanksgiving. Taylor.
The last image of that troubled heap,
When sense subsides, and fancy sports in sleep,
Though past the recollection of the thought,
Becomes the stuff of which our dream is wrought. Pope.
TO RECOMFORT. v. a. [re and comfort.]
1. To comfort or console again.
What place is there left, we may hope our woes to recomfort. Sidney, b. i.
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tides,
As the recomforted through th' gates. Shakespeare. Carollans.
As one from sad dismay Recomforted, and after thoughts disturb'd, Submitting to what seem'd remediless. Milton.
2. To give new strength.
In strawberries, it is usual to help the ground with muck; and likewise to recomfort it sometimes with muck put to the roots; but to water with muck water is not practised. Bacon.

Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakespeare.
Submit to Cæsar;
And reconcile thy mighty soul to life. Addison's Cato.
2. To make to be liked again.
Many wise men, who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering affections, believ'd the loss of the duke was unseparable. Clarendon.
He that has accustomed himself to take up with what easily offers itself, has reason to fear he shall never reconcile himself to the fatigue of turning things in his mind, to discover their more retired secrets. Locke.
2. To make any thing consistent.
The great men among the ancients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state. Locke.
Questions of right and wrong
Which though our consciences have reconciled,
My learning cannot answer. Southern's Spartan Dame.
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear, Consider'd singly, or beheld too near;
Which but proportion'd to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
3. To restore to favour.
So thou shalt do for every one that ereth and is simple, so shall ye reconcile the house. Ezek. xiv. 20.
Let him live before thee reconcil'd. Milton.
RECONCILEABLE. adj. [reconcilable, Fr. from reconcille.]
1. Capable of renewed kindness.
2. Consistent; possible to be made consistent.
What we did was against the dictates of our own conscience; and consequently never makes that act reconcilable with a regenerate estate, which otherwise would not be so. Hammond.
The different accounts of the numbers of ships are reconcilable, by supposing that some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports.
The bones, to be the most convenient, ought to have been as light, as was reconcilable with sufficient strength. Cheyne.
RECONCILEABLENESS. n. f. [from reconcilable.]
1. Consistence; possibility to be reconciled.
The cylinder is an inanimate lifeless trunk, which hath nothing of choice or will in it; and therefore cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.
Discerning how the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons and occurrences, we shall discover not only a reconcilableness, but a friendship and perfect harmony betwixt texts, that here seem most at variance. Boyle.
2. Disposition to renew love.
RECONCILEMENT. n. f. [from reconcile.]
1. Reconciliation; renewal of kindness; favour restored.

It cannot be
The Volscians dare break with us.
—We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been. Shakespeare.
The king made a record of these things, and Mardocheus wrote thereof. Esdr. xii. 4.
An ark, and in the ark his testimony,
The records of his covenant. Milton.
Of such a goddess no time leaves record,
Who bur'd the temple where she was ador'd. Dryden.
If he affirms such a monarchy continued to the flood, I would know what records he has it from. Locke.
Though the attested copy of a record be good proof, yet the copy of a copy never so well attested will not be admitted as a proof in judicature. Locke.
Thy elder look, great Janus! cast
Into the long records of ages past;
Review the years in fairest action dress'd. Prior.
RECORDATION. n. f. [recordatio, Lat.] Remembrance. Not in use.
I never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and spout as high as heav'n
For recordation to my noble husband. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke. Shakespeare.
A man of the primitive temper, when the church by lowliness did flourish in high examples, which I have inserted as a due recordation of his virtues, having been much obliged to him for many favours. Wotton.
REORDER. n. f. [from record.]
1. One whole business is to register any events.
I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make the verse. Donne.
2. The

REC

2. The keeper of the rolls in a city.
I ask'd, what meant this wilful silence?
His answer was, the people were not us'd
To be spoke to except by the recorder. Shakefp. Rich. III.
The office of recorder to this city being vacant, five or six persons are soliciting to succeed him. Swift.
3. A kind of flute; a wind instrument.
The shepherds went among them, and sang an eclogue, while the other shepherds, pulling out recorders, which possessed the place of pipes, accorded their music to the others voice. Sidney, b. ii.
In a recorder, the three uppermost holes yield one tone, which is a note lower than the tone of the first three. Bacon.
The figures of recorders, and flutes and pipes are straight;
but the recorder hath a less bore and a greater above and below. Bacon's Natural History.
To RECOU'CH. v. n. [re and couch.] To lie down again.
Thou mak'st the night to overvail the day;
Then lions whelps lie roaring for their prey,
And at thy powerful hand demand their food;
Who when at morn they all recouch again,
Then toiling man till eve pursues his pain. Wotton.
To RECOVER. v. a. [recoverer, Fr. recuperer, Lat.]
1. To restore from sickness or disorder.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him, while he rather daily sent us companions of our deceit, than ever return'd in any sound and faithful manner. Sidney.
Would my Lord were with the prophet; for he would recover him of his leprosy. 2 Kings v. 3.
The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd her light,
And nature flood recover'd of her fright. Dryden.
2. To repair.
Should we apply this precept only to those who are concerned to recover time they have lost, it would extend to the whole race of mankind. Rogers.
Even good men have many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.
3. To regain.
Stay a while; and we'll debate,
By what fate means the crown may be recover'd. Shakefp.
The spirit of the Lord is upon me, to preach the gospel to the poor, and recovering of sight to the blind. Luke iv. 18.
Once in forty years cometh a pope, that calleth his eye upon the kingdom of Naples, to recover it to the church. Bac.
These Italians, in despite of what could be done, recovered Tiliaventum. Kneller's History of the Turks.
I who e'er while the happy garden sung,
By one man's disobedience lost, now sing
Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,
By one man's firm obedience. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

REC

2. Refreshment; amusement; diversion.
You may have the recreation of surprizing those with admiration, who shall hear the deaf person pronounce whatsoever they shall desire, without your seeming to guide him.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
Nor is that man less deceived, that thinks to maintain a constant tenure of pleasure, by a continual pursuit of sports and recreations: for all these things, as they refresh a man when weary, so they weary him when refreshed. South.
RECREATIVE. adj. [from recreate.] Refreshing; giving relief after labour or pain; amusing; diverting.
Let the music be recreative, and with some strange changes. Bacon.
Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time;
but chuse such as are healthful, recreative and apt to refresh you: but at no hand dwell upon them. Taylor.
The access these trifles gain to the closets of ladies, seem to promise such easy and recreative experiments, which require but little time or charge. Boyle.
RECREATIVENESS. n. f. [from recreative.] The quality of being recreative.
RECREMENT. n. f. [recrementum, Lat.] Drofs; spume; superfluous or useless parts.
The vital fire in the heart requires an ambient body of a yielding nature, to receive the superfluous ferocities and other recrements of the blood. Boyle.
RECREMENTAL. adj. [from recrement.] Drofsy.
RECREMENTITIOUS. adj. [from recrement.] Drofsy.
To RECRIMINATE. v. n. [recriminor, Fr. re and crimi-
no, Latin.] To return one accusation with another.
It is not my business to recriminate, hoping sufficiently to clear myself in this matter. Stillfleet.
How shall such hypocrites reform the state,
On whom the brothels can recriminate? Dryden.
To RECRIMINATE. v. a. To accuse in return. Unusual.
Did not Joseph lie under black infamy? he scorned so much as to clear himself, or to recriminate the strumpet. South.
RECRIMINATION. n. f. [recrimination, Fr. from recriminate.]
Return of one accusation with another.
Publick defamation will seem disobliging enough to provoke a return, which again begets a rejoinder, and so the quarrel is carried on with mutual recriminations. Gov. of Tong.
RECRIMINATOR. n. f. [from recriminate.] He that returns one charge with another.
RECRUDESCENT. adj. [recrudescens, Lat.] Growing painful or violent again.
To RECRUIT. v. a. [recruter, Fr.]
1. To repair any thing wasted by new supplies.
He was longer in recruiting his flesh than was usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it. Wifeman's Surgery.
Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryden.
Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour. Granville.
This sun is set; but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant still. Granville.
Seeing the variety of motion, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of conserving and recruiting it by active principles; such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbs, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newton.
2. To supply an army with new men.
He trusted the earl of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clar.
To RECRUIT. v. n. To raise new soldiers.
The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.
RECRUIT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Supply of any thing wasted.
Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride. Pope.
The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.
2. New soldiers.
The pow'rs of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.
RECTANGLE. n. f. [rectangle, Fr. rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.
If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind.
Locke.

REC

- RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangularis, Fr. rectus and angulus, Latin.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.
Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Wotton's Architecture.
RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.
At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.] Capable to be set right.
The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
RECTIFICATION. n. f. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]
1. The act of setting right what is wrong.
It behoved the deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Porbes.
2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.
At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.
To RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifico, Fr. rectus and facio, Lat.]
1. To make right; to reform; to rectify.
That wherein unfounder times have done amiss, the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may. Hosker.
It shall be bootless,
That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unfertile in the king. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South.
The substance of this theory I mainly depend on, being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.
If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitiat-ing the age, had endeavour'd to rectify and amend it, they needed not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Add.
The false judgment he made of things are owned; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Asterbury.
2. To exalt and improve by repeated distillation.
The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Grew's Muscum.
RECTILINEAR. adj. [rectus and linea, Lat.] Consisting of RECTILINEOUS. adj. [rectus and linea, Lat.] Consisting of right lines.
There are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.
This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends.
The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident.
Newton's Opticks.
RECTITUDE. n. f. [rectitudo, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]
1. Straitness; not curvity.
2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or ob-liquity.
Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.
Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. Att.
RECTOR. n. f. [rector, Fr. rector, Latin.]
1. Ruler; lord; governor.
God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
When a rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university. Asliffe's Pavergon.
2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.
RECTORSHIP. n. f. [rectoratus, Fr. from rector.] The rank or office of rector.
Had your bodies
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the rectorship of judgment. Shakefp.
RECTORY. n. f. [rectoria, Fr. from rector.]
A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithes and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicated to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed.
Spelman.
RECUATION.

REC

RECUBATION. n. f. [recubo, Latin.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it sitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of session or recubation. Brown.

RECULE, for RECOIL. [reculer, Fr.] Spenser.

RECUMBENCY. n. f. [from recumbent.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning.

In that memorable shew of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the found of musick, and after laid them down in tricliniums, or places of festal recumbency. Bruton.

2. Rest; repose.

When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there. Locke.

RECUMBENT. adj. [recumbens, Lat.] Lying; leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or more properly accumbent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punic war. Arb.

TO RECURRE. v. n. [recurre, Lat.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life, the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [Recurrere, Fr.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum fians of the schools, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first. Wake's Preparation for Death.

TO RECURE. v. a. [re and cure.] To recover from sickness or labour.

Through wise handling and fair governance, I him recured to a better will, Purged from drugs of foul intemperance. Fairy Queen.

In western waves his weary wagon did recure. Fa. Queen.

With one look the doth my life difmay, And with another doth it straight recure. Spenser.

The wanton boy was shortly well recured Of that his malady. Spenser.

Thy death's wound He who comes thy Saviour shall recure, Not by destroying Satan, but his works In thee and in thy feed. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

RECURE. n. f. Recovery; remedy.

Whatever fell into the enemies hands, was lost without recure: the old men were slain, the young men led away into captivity. Knellet's History of the Turks.

RECURRENCE. n. f. [from recurrent.] Return.

Although the opinion at present be well suppressed, yet, from some strings of tradition and fruitful recurrence of error, it may revive in the next generation. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

RECURRENT. adj. [recurrent, Fr. recurrens, Lat.] Returning from time to time.

Next to lingering durable pains, short intermittent or swift recurrent pains precipitate patients unto consumptions. Harv.

RECURRENCE. n. f. [recurrens, Lat.] Return.

One of the assistants told the recurrences of the other pendulum hanging in the free air. Boyle.

RECURVATION. n. f. [recurvo, Lat.] Flexure backwards.

Ascending first into a calupary reception of the breast bone by a serpentine recurvation, it ascendeth again into the neck. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RECURVUS. adj. [recurvus, Lat.] Bent backward.

I have not observed tails in all; but in others I have observed long recurvus tails, longer than their bodies. Derham.

RECUSANT. n. f. [recusans, Lat.] One that refuses any terms of communion or society.

They demand of the lords, that no recusant lord might have a vote in passing that act. Clarendon.

Were all corners ransacked, what a multitude of recusants should we find upon a far differing account from that of conscience! Decay of Piety.

TO RECUSE. v. n. [recuse, Fr. recuso, Lat.] To refuse. A judicial word.

The humility, as well of understanding as manners of the fathers, will not let them be troubled, when they are recused as judges. Digby.

A judge may proceed notwithstanding my appeal, unless I recuse him as a suspected judge. Ayliffe's Paragon.

RED. adj. [from the old Saxon, red; rhod, Welsh. As the town of Hertford, Mr. Camden, in his Britannia, noteth, first was called, by the Saxons, Herudford, the red ford, or the red ford or water; high Dutch, rot; from the Greek, ῥοδον; French, rouge; Italian, rubro; from the Latin, rubrum. Peacocks. Of the colour of blood, of one of the primitive colours, which is subdivided into many; as scarlet, vermilion, crimlon.

6. To bring reproach.
Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.

REFLECTANT. adj. [reflectans, Lat.] Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectant, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it; it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby on the Soul.

REFLECTION. n. s. [from reflect; thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflexus, Lat.]

1. The act of throwing back.
The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakef. Julius Cæsar.

If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Chyco.

2. The act of bending back.
Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley's Sermon.

3. That which is reflected.
She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakef. Cymbeline.

As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there;
So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in this wat'ry glass. Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the past.
The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity and death may give them. Danham.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on th' unhappy man. Dryden.

Job's

REF

Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him. Atterbury.

What wounding reproaches of foul must he feel, from the reflections on his own ingratitude. Rogers's Sermons.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.
Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got. Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.
This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. Soub's Sermons.

7. Censure.
He dy'd; and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal dead. Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.
When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so the restless stream the fighting bride
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her pensile head. Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.
For'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLECTOR. n. s. [from reflect.] Considerer.
There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation. Boyle on Colours.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.
The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Flau.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

REFLEX. n. s. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.
There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves. Hooker.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakef.

REFLEXIVITY. n. s. [from reflex.] The quality of being reflexible.

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back.

Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Chyco.

REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexivus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.
Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also, in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

REFLEXOR. n. s. [reflexor, Fr. reflex, Lat.] Ebb; reflux.

The main float and reflect of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.

The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.

REFLUX. n. s. [refluxus, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.

Besides
Mine own that bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me rebound. Milton.

The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is incontra-vertible. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

REFOCILLATION. n. s. [refocillare, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

REF

To REFORM. v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence also dregs of popery. Hooker, b. iv. f. 8.

Seat worthier of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.

May no such storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Denham.

Now low ring looks preface approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reform. Dryden.

One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without rendering himself ridiculous. Lake.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform it. Swift.

To REFORM. v. n. To make a change from worse to better.

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point? Atterbury.

REFORM. n. s. [French.] Reformation.

REFORMATION. n. s. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, as in this king. Shakef. Henry V.

Satire lashes vice into reformation. Dryden.

The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate. Addison.

2. The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.
The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.

REFORMER. n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.
Publick reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: Abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home. Spratt's Sermons.

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.

2. Those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.
Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

To REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Chyco's Phil. Princ.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Chyco.

Refracted from yon eastern cloud,
The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Thomson.

REFRACTION. n. s. [refraction, Fr.]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton's Opticks.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton's Opticks.

REFRACTORINESS. n. s. [from refractus.] Sullen obtinacy.

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. King Charles.

Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gang, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order. Saunderson.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractorius, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obdurate; perverse; contumacious.

There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakef.

A rough hewn seaman, being brought before a wife justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory fullness. King Charles.

Refractory

REF

Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and fullen; and therefore, like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason. Bentley.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.

TO REFRAIN. v. a. [refrainer, Fr. re and frænum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; re-frain not thyself. Psalms lxxxiii. 1.

My son, walk not thou in the way with them, re-frain thy foot from their path. Prov. i. 15.

Nor from the holy one of heav'n Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now re-frain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.

TO REFRAIN. v. n. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly re-frain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and re-frain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Jf. xlviii. 9.

That they fed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they re-frained therefrom some time after. Brown's Vulg. Err.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. f. [from refrangible.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Lat.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their course, in passing from one medium to another; it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Locke.

REFRENATION. n. f. [re and frano, Lat.] The act of restraining.

TO REFRESH. v. a. [refraischer, Fr. refrigerer, Lat.]

The kind refreshing of the summer heats. Thomson.

REFRESHMENT. n. f. [from refresh.]

1. Relief after pain, want or fatigue.

2. That which gives relief, as food, rest.

He was full of agony and horror upon the approach of a dismal death, and so had most need of the refreshments of society, and the friendly assistances of his disciples. South.

Such honest refreshments and comforts of life, our christian liberty has made it lawful for us to use. Sprat.

REFRIGERANT. adj. [refrigerant, Fr. from refrigerare.] Cooling; mitigating heat.

In the cure of gangrenes, you must beware of dry heat, and resort to things that are refrigerant, with an inward warmth and virtue of cherishing. Bacon.

If it arise from an external cause, apply refrigerants, without any preceding evacuation. Wifeman's Surgery.

TO REFRIGERATE. v. a. [refrigere, re and frigus, Lat.] To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air in great circles, such as the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the breezes are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon. Bacon's Natural History.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinately or somewhat equinoctially, though in a lesser degree, they discover some veracity. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

REFRIGERATION. n. f. [refrigeratio, Lat. refrigeration, Fr.]

The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

Divers do stut; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move. Bacon.

If the mere refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRIGERATIVE. adj. [refrigerativus, Fr. refrigeratorius, Lat.]

REFRIGERATORY. s. Cooling; having the power to cool.

REFRIGERATORY. n. f.

1. That part of a distilling vessel that is placed above the head of a still, and filled with water to cool the condensing vapours; but this is now generally done by a worm or spiral pipe, turning through a tub of cold water. Quincy.

2. Any thing internally cooling.

A delicate wine, and a durable refrigeratory. Mortimer.

REFRIGERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Cool refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeriums, respites or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REFR. part. pret. of reave.

1. Deprived; taken away.

Thus we well left, he better refr,
In heaven to take his place,

That by like life and death, at last,
We may obtain like grace. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

I, in a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling refr,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shakespeare.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,
And would have refr the fishers of their prey. Shakespeare.

Our dying hero, from the continent
Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards refr,
As his last legacy to Britain left. Waller.

2. Preterite of reave. Took away.

So 'twixt them both, they not a lamkin left,
And when lambs fail'd, the old sheeps lives they refr. Spenser.

About his shoulders broad he threw An hairy hide of some wild beast, whom he
In savage forest by adventure flew,
And refr the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REFUGEE. n. f. [refugee, Fr. refugium, Lat.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress; protection.

Rocks, dens and caves! but I in none of these Find place or refugee. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

The young ones, suppos'd to break through the belly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it, for then the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again; which is a peculiar way of refugee. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Those, who take refugee in a multitude, have an Arian council to answer for.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refugee for the oppressed; a refugee in times of trouble. Psalms ix. 9.

Augurs, that understand relations, have
The secret of man of blood. Shakef. Macbeth.
 4. Kindred; alliance of kin.
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of fathers, son and brother first were known. Milton.
Be kindred and relation laid aside, Dryden.
And honour's cause by laws of honour try'd.
Are we not to pity and supply the poor, though they have no relation to us? no relation? that cannot be: the gospel files them all our brethren; nay, they have a nearer relation to us, our fellow-members; and both these from their relation to our Saviour himself, who calls them his brethren. Sprat.
Person related by birth or marriage; kinsman; kinswoman.
A the-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations. Swift.
Dependants, friends, relations,
Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson.
 6. Narrative; tale; account; narration; recital of facts.
In an historical relation, we use terms that are most proper. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
The author of a just fable, must please more than the writer of an historical relation. Dennis's Letters.
- RELATIVE, adj. [relations, Lat. relativus, Fr.]
1. Having relation; respecting.
Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.
 2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.
The ecclesiastical, as well as the civil government, has cause to pursue the same methods of confirming himself; the grounds of government being founded upon the same bottom of nature in both, though the circumstances and relative considerations of the persons may differ. South.
Every thing sustains both an absolute and a relative capacity: an absolute, as it is such a thing, endued with such a nature; and a relative, as it is a part of the universe, and so stands in such relation to the whole. South.
Wholesome and unwholesome are relative, not real qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.
I'll have grounds
More relative than this. Shakef. Macbeth.
- RELATIVE, n. f.

To curb poor Paulo in too close;
In others the relax'd again,
And govern'd with a looser rein. Prior.
- RELAXATION, n. f. [relaxatio, Fr. relaxatio, Lat.]
1. Diminution of tension; the act of loosening.
Cold sweats are many times mortal; for that they come by a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon.
Many, who live healthy in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon relaxation in a moist one. Arbutnot.
 2. Cessation of restraint.
The sea is not higher than the land, as some imagined the sea stood upon heap higher than the shore; and at the deluge a relaxation being made, it overflow'd the land. Burnet.
 3. Remission; abatement of rigour.
They childishly granted, by common consent of their whole senate, under their town seal, a relaxation to one Bertelier, whom the eldership had excommunicated. Hobbes.
The relaxation of the statute of mortmain, is one of the reasons which gives the bishop terrible apprehensions of poverty coming on us. Swift.
 4. Remission of attention or application.
As God has not so devoted our bodies to toil, but that he allows us some recreation: so doubtless he indulges the same relaxation to our minds. Government of the Tongue.
There would be no business of no business, nor proper relaxations in business. Adelphi's Freeholder.
- RELAY, n. f. [relais, Fr.] Horses on the road to relieve others.
- TO RELEASE, v. a. [relasare, relaxo, Fr.]
1. To set free from confinement or servitude.
Plato said, whom will ye that I release unto you? Mat.

A valour fatal to the enemy. Dryden.
Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her? Dryden.
 2. To set free from pain.
 3. To free from obligation.
Too secure, because from death relax'd some days. Mill.
 4. To quit; to let go.
He had been bafe, had he relax'd his right,
For such an empire none but kings should fight. Dryden.
 5. To relax; to slacken. Not in use.
It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relax'd, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hobbes.
- RELEASE, n. f. [relasare, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Dimission from confinement, servitude or pain.
O fatal search! in which the lab'ring mind,
Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
A shadow of delight, a dream of peace,
From years of pain, one moment of release. Prior.
 2. Relaxation of a penalty.
 3. Remission of a claim.
The king made a great feast, and made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts. Ezra. ii. 18.
The king would not have one penny abated, of what had been granted by parliament; because it might encourage other countries to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.
 4. Acquittance from a debt signed by the creditor.
- TO RELEGATE, v. a. [relegare, Fr. relego, Lat.] To banish; to exile.
- RELEGATION, n. f. [relegation, Fr. relegatio, Lat.] Exile; judicial banishment.

- TO RELENT, v. n. [relentir, Fr.]
1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.
In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bacon.
In that soft season, when descending show'rs
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flow'rs;
When opening buds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray. Pope.
 2. To melt; to grow moist.
Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.
Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the imbibed moisture of the air, wherein if it be left long, it will totally be dissolved. Boyle.
All nature mourns, the skies relent in show'rs, Hush'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flow'rs;
If Delia smile, the flow'rs begin to spring,
The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing. Pope.
 3. To grow less intense.
I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slackening of the main career, you had so notably begun, and almost performed. Shelton.
The workmen let glass cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air. Digby on Bodies.

REL

4. To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.
Can you behold
My tears, and not once relent? Shakef. Henry VI.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakef. Merch. of Venice.
Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure.
He sung, and hell confented
To hear the poet's pray'r;
Stern Prosperine relent'd,
And gave him back the fair. Pope.
- TO RELENT, v. a.
1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.
Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,
And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
That him his foe more fiercely should pursue. Pa. Queen.
 2. To soften; to mollify. Obsolete.
Air hated earth, and water hated fire,
Till love relent'd their rebellious ire. Spenser.
- RELENTLESS, adj. [from relent.]
1. Unpitying; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts;
Thus will perfit, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire.
Why should the weeping hero now Relentless to their wishes prove. Prior.
Relentless, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disgusting objects.
Only in destroying, I find ease
To my relentless thoughts. Milton's Par. Lost.
 2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disgusting objects.
Only in destroying, I find ease
To my relentless thoughts. Milton's Par. Lost.

- RELIEFANCE, n. f. [from relief.] Trust; dependance; confidence; repose of mind. With an before the object of trust.
His days and times are pass,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has limit my credit. Shakef. Timon of Athens.
That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he pitches upon with so great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution. Woodward.
He secured and encreas'd his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reliance on his providence. Atterbury's Sermons.
They afforded a sufficient conviction of this truth, and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it. Rogers.
Resignation in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying. Clarissa.
Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon. Clarissa.
- RELICK, n. f. [reliquiae, Lat. reliquie, Fr.]
1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.
Up dreary dame of darkness queen,
Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else go them to avenge. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Shall we go see the reliques of this town. Shakef.
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her devotion faith are bound to Diomedes. Shakef.
Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains;
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden's Enri.
 2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.
What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled stones;
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a star-pointed pyramid. Milton.
In peace, ye shades of our great grandfathers, rest;
External spring, and rising flow'rs adorn
The reliques of each venerable urn. Dryden.
Shall our reliques second birth receive?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live?
Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred place by Dryden's awful dust,
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.
That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.
Crows flutter'd into rags, then reliques leaves
The sport of winds. Milton.
This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- RELICKLY, adv. [from reliques.] In the manner of reliques.
Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen fluff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year Relickly kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Donne.
- RELICT, n. f. [relicta, old Fr. relicta, Lat.] A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

REL

- If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their reliefs and children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat's Sermons.
- Chaste relief!
- Honour'd on earth, and worthy of the love
Of such a spouse, as now resides above. Garth.
- RELIEF, n. f. [relief, Fr.]
1. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.
The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those on the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Addison on Ancient Medals.
Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have shin'd,
In polish'd verse, the manners and the mind. Pope.
 2. The recommendation of any thing, by the interposition of something different.
Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton.
 3. Alleviation of calamity; mitigation of pain or sorrow.
That which frees from pain or sorrow.
So should we make our death a glad relief
From future shame. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Nor dar'd I to presume, that press'd with grief,
My flight should urge you to this dire relief. Dryden's Enri.
Stay, stay your steps.
 5. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.
For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart. Shakef. Hamlet.
 6. [Reliefum, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.
- RELIEVABLE, adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.
Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.
- TO RELIEVE, [relievo, Lat. relever, Fr.]
1. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.
As the great lamp of day,
Through diff'rent regions, does his course pursue,
And leaves one world but to revive a new;
While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night
Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Stepney.
Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes relieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.
 2. To support; to assist.
Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass alunder, yet are they plausible together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 3. To ease pain or sorrow.
 4. To succour by assistance.
From thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
A pittance of thy land will set him free. Dryden.
 5. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.
Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?
—Bernado has my place, give you good night. Shakef.
Relieve the centries that have watch'd all night. Dryden.

He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his wants. Rogers's Sermons.
- RELIEVO, n. f. [Italian.] The prominence of a figure or picture.
A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies: the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relief and more strength. Dryden's Dunciad.
- TO RELIGHT, v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.
His pow'r can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.
- RELIGION, n. f. [religion, Fr. religio, Lat.]
1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.
He that is void of fear, may soon be just,
And no religion binds men to be traitors. Benj. Johnson.
One spoke much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth and peace
And judgment from above. Milton.
If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.
By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her aid discern. Blackmore.
Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.
 2. A system of divine faith and worship as opposite to others.
The image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold. Milton.
The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is. More.

REL

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.

RELIGIOUSIST. n. f. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motly administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and deprecate the others.

RELIGIOUS. adj. [religieux, Fr. religiosus, Lat.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose habits the same proceed.

When holy and devout religious christians

Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence;

So sweet is zealous contemplation!

Their lives

Religious titled them the sons of God.

Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,

More of his grace than gifts to lend;

And entertains the harmless day

With a religious book or friend.

Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience.

Certain friars and religious men were moved with some zeal, to draw the people to the christian faith.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiastics, secular and religious.

What the protestants would call a fanatic, is in the Roman church a religious of such an order; as an English merchant in Lisbon, after some great disappointments in the world, resolved to turn capuchin.

Exactly strict.

RELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from religious.]

1. Piously; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

According to the rites of religion.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths behold

Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain

Religiously they ask a sacrifice.

Dost thou in all thy addresses to him, come into his presence with reverence, kneeling and religiously bowing thyself before him.

Exactly; with strict observance.

The privileges, justly due to the members of the two houses and their attendants, are religiously to be maintained.

RELIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from religious.] The quality or state of being religious.

To RELINQUISH. v. a. [relinquo, Lat.]

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquished.

The English colonies grew poor and weak, though the English lords grew rich and mighty; for they placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquished by the English.

2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God; by which act he relinquishes and delivers back to God all his right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God.

3. To forsake; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and noxious quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still.

RELINQUISHMENT. n. f. [from relinquish.] The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish.

That natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning.

RELISH. n. f. [from relecher, Fr. to lick again. Minshew, Skinner.]

1. Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate; it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Under sharp, sweet and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern.

These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from saltpetre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor carosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

REL

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd

From this delightful fruit, nor known till now

True relish, tasting.

Could we suppose their relishes as different there as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant.

2. Taste; small quantity just perceptible.

The king becoming graces;

As justice, verity, temperance, staidness,

Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;

I have no relish of them.

Liking; delight in any thing.

We have such a relish for faction, as to have lost that of wit.

Good men after death are distributed among these several islands with pleasures of different kinds, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those settled in them.

3. Senle; power of perceiving excellence; taste.

A man, who has any relish for fine writing, discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him.

Some hidden seeds of goodness and knowledge give him a relish of such reflections, as improve the mind, and make the heart better.

The pleasure of the proprietor, to whom things become familiar, depends, in a great measure, upon the relish of the spectator.

4. Delight given by any thing; the power by which pleasure is given.

Expectation whisks me round;

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,

That it enchants my sense.

When liberty is gone,

Life grows insipid, and has lost its relish.

5. Cast; manner.

It preserves some relish of old writing.

To RELISH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give a taste to any thing.

On smoking lard they dine;

A fav'ry bit that serv'd to relish wine.

2. To taste; to have a liking.

I love the people;

Though it do well, I do not relish well

Their loud applause.

How will dissenting brethren relish it?

What will malignants say?

Men of nice palates would not relish Aristotle, as dress'd up by the schoolmen.

He knows how to prize his advantages, and relish the honours which he enjoys.

To RELISH. v. n.

1. To have a pleasing taste.

The ivory feet of tables were carved into the shape of lions, without which, their greatest dainties would not relish to their palates.

2. To give pleasure.

Had I been the under-out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

3. To have a flavour.

A theory, which how much soever it may relish of wit and invention, hath no foundation in nature.

RELISHABLE. adj. [from relish.] Gustable; having a taste.

To RELIVE. v. n. [re and live.] To revive; to live anew.

The thing on earth, which is of most avail,

Any virtue's branch and beauty's bud,

Relives not for any good.

To RELOVE. v. a. [re and love.] To love in return.

To own for him so familiar and levelling an affection as love, much more to expect to be relived by him, were not the least saucy presumption man could be guilty of, did not his own commandments make it a duty.

RELUCENT. adj. [relucens, Latin.] Shining; transparent; pellucid.

In brighter mazes, the relucient stream

Plays o'er the mead.

To RELUCT. v. n. [relucto, Lat.] To struggle again.

We, with studied mixtures, force our relucting appetites, and with all the spells of epicurism, conjure them up, that we may lay them again.

RELUCTANCE. n. f. [reluctatio, Latin.] Unwillingness; reluctance.

A little more weight, added to the lower of the marbles, is able to surmount their reluctance to separation, notwithstanding the supposed danger of thereby introducing a vacuum.

It favours

Reluctance against God, and his just yoke

Laid on our necks.

Bear witness, heav'n, with what reluctance

Her hapless innocence i doom to die.

REM

Aeneas, when forced in his own defence to kill Lausus, the poet shows compassionate, and tempering the severity of his looks with a reluctance to the action; he has pity on his beauty and his youth; and is loth to destroy such a masterpiece of nature.

How few would be at the pains of acquiring such an habit, and of conquering all the reluctancies and difficulties that lay in the way towards virtue.

Many hard stages of discipline must he pass through, before he can subdue the reluctancies of his corruption.

With great reluctance man is persuaded to acknowledge this necessity.

RELUCTANT. adj. [reluctans, Lat.] Unwilling; acting with repugnance.

Reluctant; but in vain! a greater power

Now rul'd him.

Some refuge in the muse's art I found;

Reluctant now I touch'd the trembling string

Bereft of him, who taught me how to sing.

To RELUCTATE. v. n. [reluctor, Lat.] To resist; to struggle against.

In violation of God's patrimony, the first sacrilege is looked on with some honour, and men devise colours to delude their reluctating consciences; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires.

The king prevailed with the prince, though not without some reluctance.

Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to a rebellion or reluctance.

To RELUCE. v. a. To light anew; to rekindle.

Reluce her ancient light, nor kindle new.

To RELUMINE. v. a. To light anew.

Once put out thy light;

I know not where is that Promethean heat,

That can thy light relume.

To RELY. v. n. [re and ye.] To lean upon with confidence; to put trust in; to rest upon; to depend upon.

Go in thy native innocence I rely

On what thou hast of virtue; summon all!

For God tow'rd's thee hath done his part, do thine.

Egypt does not on the clouds rely,

But to the Nile owes more than to the sky.

Thus Solon to Pisistratus reply'd,

Demanded, on what succour he rely'd,

When with so few he boldly did engage;

He said, he took his courage from his age.

Though reason is not to be relied upon, as universally sufficient to direct us what to do; yet it is generally to be relied upon and obeyed, where it tells us what we are not to do.

Fear relies upon a natural love of ourselves, and is complicated with a necessary desire of our own preservation.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding that relies on them.

The pope was become a party in the cause, and could not be relied upon for a decision.

Do we find to much religion in the age, as to rely on the general practice for the measures of our duty?

No prince can ever rely on the fidelity of that man, who is a rebel to his Creator.

To REMAIN. v. n. [remaneo, Lat.]

1. To be left out of a greater quantity or number.

That that remains, shall be buried in death.

Bake that which ye will bake to-day; and that which remains over, lay up until the morning.

2. To continue; to endure; to be left.

He for the time remain'd happily good.

If what you have heard, shall remain in you, ye shall continue in the son.

3. To be left after an event.

Childless thou art, childless remain.

In the families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to inheritance.

4. Not to be lost.

Now somewhat sing, whose endless souvenance

Among the shepherds may for aye remain.

I was increased more than all that were before me, also my wisdom remained with me.

5. To be left as not comprised.

That a father may have some power over his children, is easily granted; but that an elder brother has so over his brethren, remains to be proved.

To REMAIN. v. a. To await; to be left to.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be

Of craft, coloured with simplicity

And such end, parties, does all them remain

That of such false friends friendship shall be vain.

With oaken leaf

I'll raise such outcries on thy clatter'd iron,

Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,

That in a little time, while breath remains thee,

REM

Thou oft shalt wi h thyself at Gath to boast;

But never shalt see Gath.

If thence he scape, what remains him less

Than unknown dangers.

The easier conquest now

Remains thee, aided by this host of friends,

Back on thy foes more glorious to return.

REMAIN. v. n. [from the verb.]

1. Relick; that which is left. Generally used in the plural.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo.

2. The body left by the soul.

But fowls obscene dismember'd his remains.

And dogs had torn him.

Oh would'st thou sing what heroes Windsor bore,

Or raise old warriors, whose ador'd remains,

In weeping vaults, her hallow'd earth contains.

3. Abode; habitation. Not in use.

A most miraculous work in this good king,

pery, which never admitted scripture in the vulgar tongue. Swift.
REMNANT. adj. [corruptly formed from remnant.] Remaining; yet left.
It bid her feel
No future pain for me; but instant wed
A lover more proportion'd to her bed;
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.
REMOLTEN. part. [from remelt.] Melted again.
It were good to try in glass works, whether the crude materials, mingled with glass already made and remolten, do not facilitate the making of glass with less heat. Bacon.

REM

REMONSTRANCE. n. f. [remonstrance, Fr. from remonstrare.]
1. Show; discovery. Not in use.
You may marvel, why I would not rather Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,
Than let him be so lost. Shakefp. Meas. for Meas.
2. Strong representation.
The same God, which revealeth it to them, would also give them power of confirming it unto others, either with miraculous operation, or with strong and invincible remonstrance of found reason. Hooker, b. v. f. 10.
A large family of daughters have drawn up a remonstrance, in which they set forth, that their father, having refused to take in the Spectator, they offered to 'bate him the article of bread and butter in the tea-table. Addison's Spectator.
Important passions surround the man, and will not suffer him to attend to the remonstrance of justice. Rogers.

impious act by any remorse of conscience, or that they had not wickedness enough to design and execute it. Clarendon.
2. Tenderness; pity; sympathetic sorrow.
Many little evils of their own lives, yet, for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld. Spenser.
Shylock, thou lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought,
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange;
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty. Shakefp. Meas. for Meas.
The rogues slighted me into the river, with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies. Shakefp.
Curse on th' unpar'd'ning prince, whom tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law. Dryden.
REMORSEFUL. adj. [remorsus and full.] Tender; compassionate.
O Glamour, think not I flatter, Valiant and wife, remorseful, well accomplish'd. Shakefp.

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great tender turns a fowre offence. Shakefp.
The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakefp. Henry VI.
REMORSELESS. adj. [from remorse.] Unpitiful; cruel; savage.
Where were the nymphs, when the remorseless deep Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas. Milton.
O the inexpressible horror that will seize upon a sinner, when he stands arraigned at the bar of divine justice! when he shall see his accuser, his judge, the witness, all his remorseless adversaries. South's Sermons.
REMOTE. adj. [remotus, Lat.]
1. Distant; not immediate.
In this narrow scantling of capacity, it is not all remote and even apparent good that affects us. Locke.
2. Distant; not at hand.
3. Removed far off; placed not near.
Wherever the mind places itself by any thought, either amongst, or remote from all bodies, it can, in this uniform idea of space, no where find any bounds. Locke.
In quiet shades, content with rural sports,
Give me a life, remote from guilty courts. Granville.
4. Foreign.
5. Distant; not closely connected.

ideas, that shew the connection of remote ones. Locke.
6. Alien; not agreeing.
All those propositions, how remote soever from reason, are so sacred, that men will sooner part with their lives, than suffer themselves to doubt of them. Locke.
7. Abstracted.
REMOVEDLY. adv. [from remote.] Not nearly; at a distance.
It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited, at least not remotely planted before the flood. Brown.
Two lines in Mezentius and Lausus are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense, but too like the tenderness of Ovid, Dry.

REM

While the fainting Dutch remotely fire
In the first front amidst a slaughter'd pile,
High on the mound he dy'd. Smith.
REMOVEDNESS. n. f. [from remote.] State of being remote;
distance; not nearness.
The joys of heaven are like the stars, which by reason of our remoteness appear extremely little. Boyle.
Titian employed brown and earthly colours upon the forepart, and has reserved his greater light for remotenesses and the back part of his landscapes. Dryden.
If the greatest part of bodies escape our notice by their remoteness, others are no less concealed by their minuteness. Locke.
His obscurities generally arise from the remoteness of the customs, persons and things he alludes to. Addison.
REMOVAL. n. f. [from removere, Lat.] The act of removing; the state of being removed to distance.
All this safety were remotion, and thy defence absence. Sha.
This act persuades me,
'Tis the remotion of the duke and her.
The consequent strictly taken, may be a fallacious illation, in reference to antecedency or consequence; as to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or from the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
REMOVABLE. adj. [from remove.] Such as may be removed.
The Irish bishops have their clergy in such subjection, that they dare not complain of them; for knowing their own incapacity, and that they are therefore removable at their bishop's will, yield what pleaseth him. Spenser.
In such a chapel, such curate is removable at the pleasure of the rector of the mother church. Ayliffe's Parergon.
REMOVABLE. n. f. [from remove.]
1. The act of putting out of any place.
By which removal of one extremity with another, the world, seeking to procure a remedy, hath purchased a mere exchange of the evil before felt. Hooker.
2. The act of putting away.
The removal of such a disease is not to be attempted by active remedies; no more than a thorn in the flesh is to be taken away by violence. Arbutnot.
3. Diminution from a post.
If the removal of these persons from their posts has produced such popular commotions, the continuance of them might have produced something more fatal. Addison.
Whether his removal was caused by his own fears or other men's artifices, supposing the throne to be vacant, the body of the people was left at liberty to chuse what form of government they pleased. Swift.
4. The state of being removed.
The fitting still of a paralytic, whilst he prefers it to a removal, is voluntary. Locke.
TO REMOVE. v. a. [removere, Lat. removere, Fr.]
1. To put from its place; to take or put away.
Good God remove
The means that makes us strangers! Shakefp. Macbeth.
He removeth away the speech of the trusty, and taketh away the understanding of the aged. Job xii. 20.
Remove thy stroke away from me; I am consumed by the blow. Psalms xxxix. 13.
So would he have removed thee out of the straight into a broad place. Job xxxvi. 16.
He longer in this paradise to dwell
Permits not; to remove thee I am come,
And send thee from the garden forth to till
The ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.
You, who fill the blissful seats above!
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
But every monarch be the scourge of God,
If from your thoughts Ulysses you remove,
Who rul'd his subjects with a father's love. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To place at a distance.
They are farther removed from a title to be innate, and the doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other. Locke.
TO REMOVE. v. n.
1. To change place.
2. To go from one place to another.
A short exile must for show precede;
The term expir'd, from Candia they remove,
And happy each at home enjoys his love. Dryden.
How oft from pomp and state did I remove To feed despair. Prior.
REMOVED. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Change of place.
2. Susceptibility of being removed. Not in use.
What is early received in any considerable strength of impression, grows into our tender natures; and therefore is of difficult remove. Clarwill's Setts.
3. Translation

REM

3. Translation of one to the place of another.
Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear;
Hold, take you this, my sweet, and give me thine,
So shall I have thee for Rosaline;
And change your favours too; so shall your loves Woo contrary deceiv'd by their remover. Shakefp.
4. State of being removed.
This place should be both school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.
He that considers how little our constitution can bear a remove into parts of this air, not much higher than that we breathe in, will be satisfied, that the allwise architect has suited our organs, and the bodies that are to effect them, one to another. Locke.
5. Act of moving a cheffman or draught.
6. Departure; act of going away.
So look'd Alfreia, her remove design'd,
On those distressed friends the left behind. Waller.
7. The act of changing place.
Let him, upon his removes from one place to another, procure recommendation to some person of quality residing in the place whither he removeth. Bacon's Essays.
8. A stop in the scale of gradation.
In all the visible corporeal world, quite down from us, the descent is by easy steps, and a continued series of things, that in each remove differ very little one from the other. Locke.
A freholder is but one remove from a legislator, and ought to stand up in the defence of those laws. Addison.
9. A small distance.
The fiercest contentions of men are between creatures equal in nature, and capable, by the greatest distinction of circumstances, of but a very small remove one from another. Rogers.
10. Act of putting a horse's shoes upon different feet.
His horse wanted two removes, your horse wanted nails. Sw.
REMOVED. particp. adj. [from remove.] Remote; separate from others.
Your accent is something finer, than you could purchase in to removed a dwelling. Shakefp. As You Like it.
REMOVEDNESS. n. f. [from removed.] The state of being removed; remoteness.
I have eyes under my service, which look upon his removedness. Shakefp.
REMOVED. n. f. [from remove.] One that removes.
The millayer of a merline is to blame; but the unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he deniech amiss.
Hasty fortune maketh an enterpriser and remover, but the exercised fortune maketh the able man. Bacon.
TO REMOUNT. v. n. [remounter, Fr.] To mount again.
Stout Cymon soon remounts, and cleft in two
His rival's head. Dryden.
The rest remounts with the ascending vapours, or is washed down into rivers, and transmitted into the sea. Woodward.
REMOVED. adj. [from remunerate.] Rewardable.
TO REMUNERATE. v. a. [remunero, Lat. remunerare, Fr.]
To reward; to repay; to requite; to recompense.
Is she not then beholden to the man,
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes; and will nobly remunerate. Shakefp. Titus Andron.
Money the king thought not fit to demand, because he had received satisfaction in matters of so great importance; and because he could not remunerate them with any general pa-don, being prevented therein by the coronation pardon. Bacon.
In another parable, he represents the great confessions, wherewith the Lord shall remunerate the faithful servant. Boyle.
REMUNERATION. n. f. [remuneration, Fr. remuneratio, Lat.]
Reward; requital; recompense; repayment.
Bear this significant to the country maid, Jaquenetta; there is remuneration; for the best way of mine honour is rewarding my dependants. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
He begets a security of himself, and a careless eye on the last remunerations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A collation is a donation of some vacant benefice in the church, especially when such donation is freely bestowed without any prospect of an evil remuneration. Ayliffe.
REMUNERATIVE. adj. [from remunerate.] Exercised in giving rewards.
The knowledge of particular actions seems requisite to the attainment of that great end of God, in the manifestation of his punitive and remunerative justice. Boyle.
TO REMURMUR. v. a. [re and murmur.] To utter back in murmurs; to repeat in low hoarse sounds.
Her fate is whisper'd by the gentle breeze,
And told in sighs to all the trembling trees;
The trembling trees, in ev'ry plain and wood,
Her fate remurmur to the silver flood. Pepe.
TO REMURMUR. v. n. [remurmure, Lat.] To murmur back;
to echo a low hoarse sound.
Her fellow nymphs the mountains rear
With loud laments, and break the yielding air;
The realms of Mars remurmur'd all around,
And echoes to th' Athenian shores rebound. Dryden.

REN

His untimely fate, th' Angitian woods
In sighs remurmur'd to the Fucine floods. Dryden.
RENA'RD. n. f. [renard, a fox, Fr.] The name of a fox in again.

TO RENA'VIGATE. [re and navigare.] To sail again.
RENCOUNTER. n. f. [rencontre, Fr.]
1. Clash; collision.
You may as well expect two bowls should grow sensible by rubbing, as that the rencounter of any bodies should awaken them into perception. Collier.
2. Personal opposition.
Virgil's friends thought fit to alter a line in Venus's speech, that has a relation to the rencounter. Addison.
So when the trumpet sounding gives the sign,
The juggling chiefs in rude rencounter join:
So meet, and so renew the dextrous fight;
Their clattering arms with the fierce shock rebound. Gran.
3. Loose or casual engagement.
The confederates should turn to their advantage their apparent odds in men and horse; and by that means out-number the enemy in all rencounters and engagements. Addison.
4. Sudden combat without premeditation.
TO RENCOUNTER. v. n. [rencontrer, Fr.]
1. To clash; to collide.
2. To meet an enemy unexpectedly.
3. To skirmish with another.
4. To fight hand to hand.
TO REND. v. a. pret. and past. rent. [rentari, Saxon.]
To tear with violence; to lacerate.
Will you hence
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He rent a lion as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand. Jud. xiv. 4.
I will not rend away all the kingdom, but give one tribe to thy son. 1 Kings xi. 13.
By the thund'rer's stroke it from th' root is rent,
So fire the blows, which from high heaven are sent, Cowley.
What you command me to relate,
Renews the sad remembrance of our fate,
An empire from its old foundations rent. Dryden.
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree;
Then rend it off. Dryden's Æneis.
Is it not as much reason to say, when any monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, that God was careful to preserve monarchical power, by rending a settled empire into a multitude of little governments. Locke.
When its way th' impetuous passion found,
I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound. Pepe.
From cloud to cloud the rending lightnings rage. Thomson.
RE'NDER. n. f. [from rend.] One that rends; a tearer.
TO RENDER. v. a. [rendre, Fr.]
1. To return; to pay back.
What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits. Pf.
They that render evil for good are adversaries. Pf. xxxviii.
Will ye render me a recompense? Jos. iii. 4.
Let him look into the future state of bliss or misery, and see there God, the righteous judge, ready to render every man according to his deeds. Locke.
2. To restore; to give back.
Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the laden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison.
3. To give upon demand.
The sluggard is wiser in his own conceits, than seven men that can render a reason. Proverbs xxxvi. 16.
4. To invest with qualities; to make.
Because the nature of man carries him out to action, it is no wonder if the same nature renders him solicitous about the issue. South's Sermons.
Love
Can answer love, and render bliss secure. Thomson.
5. To represent; to exhibit.
I heard him speak of that same brother,
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd amongst men. Shakefp.
6. To translate.
Render it in the English a circle; but 'tis more truly rendered a sphere. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
He has a clearer idea of strigil and fistrum, a curry-comb and cymbal, which are the English names dictionaries render them by. Locke.
He

REN

- He uses only a prudent diffimulation; the word we may almost literally render master of a great presence of mind. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
7. To surrender; to yield; to give up.
I will call him to strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Or I will tear the reck'ning from his heart. Shakesp.
My rend'ring my person to them, may engage their affections to me. King Charles.
One, with whom he used to advise, proposed to him to render himself upon conditions to the earl of Essex. Clarendon.
Would he render up Hermione,
And keep Aftyanax, I should be blest! A. Philips.

Among the bands, may drive us to a render. Shakesp.
RENDEZVOUS. n. f. [rendezvous, Fr.]
1. Assembly; meeting appointed.
A commander of many ships should rather keep his fleet together, than have it evered far asunder; for the attendance of meeting them again at the next rendezvous would consume time and victual. Raleigh's Apology.
2. A sign that draws men together.
The philosophers-stone and a holy war are but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wear their feather in their head instead of their hat. Bacon.
3. Place appointed for assembly.
The king appointed his whole army to be drawn together to a rendezvous at Marlborough. Clarendon.
This was the general rendezvous which they all got to, and, mingling more and more with that oily liquor, they sucked it all up. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
TO RENDEZVOUS. v. n. [from the noun.] To meet at a place appointed.
RENDITION. n. f. [from render.] Surrendering; the act of yielding.

There lived a French renegade in the same place, where the Castilian and his wife were kept prisoners. Addison.
2. One who defects to the enemy; a revoler.
Some flagging soldiers might prove renegades, but they would not revolt in troops. Decay of Piety.
If the Roman government subsisted now, they would have had renegade seamen and shipwrights enough. Arbutnot.
TO RENEGE. v. a. [renege, Lat. renier, Fr.] To disown.
His captain's heart,
Which, in the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper. Shakesp.
Such smiling rogues as these foath every passion,
Reneg, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shakesp.
The design of this war is to make me reneg my conscience and thy truth. King Charles.
TO RENEW. v. a. [re and new; renova, Lat.]
1. To renovate; to restore the former state.
In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs,
That did renew old Ælon. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
It is impossible for those that were once enlightened—if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance. Hebrews vi. 6.
Let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there. 1 Sam.
Renew'd to life, that the might daily die,
I daily doom'd to follow. Dryden's Theo. and Honor.
2. To repeat; to put again in act.
Thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee; long may'st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories! Shakesp.
The body percuss'd hath, by reason of the percussion, a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
The bearded corn enu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
3. To begin again.
The last great age, foretold by sacred rhymes,
Renews its finish'd course, Saturnian times Rowl round again. Dryden's Virgil's Pastorals.
4. In theology, to make anew; to transform to new life.
Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that perfect will of God. Rom. xii. 2.

Nor envy we Thy great renouwn, nor grudge thy victory. Dryden.
TO RENOU'WN. v. a. [renouwner, Fr. from the noun.] To make famous.
Let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renouwn this city. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
Soft elocution does thy style renouwn,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.
In solemn silence stand
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renouwn,
And emperors in Parian marble frown. Addison.
A bard, whom pilfer'd pastorals renouwn,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear. Pope.
RENOU'WNED. particp. adj. [from renouwn.] Famous; celebrated; eminent; famed.
These were the renouwned of the congregation, princes of the tribes, heads of thousands. Numb. i. 16.
That thrice renouwned and learned French king, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription, wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that he who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph. Peacham on Poetry.
The rest were long to tell, though far renouwn'd. Milton.
Of all the cities in Roman lands,
The chief and most renouwn'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts. Dryden.
Ilva,
An ile renouwn'd for steel and unexhausted mines. Dryden.
RENT.

REP

- RENT*. n. f. [from rent.] A break; a laceration.
Thou viper
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way,
Through thy own blood to empire. Dryden.
He who fees this vast rent in so high a rock, how the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
TO RENT. v. a. [rather to rend.] To tear; to lacerate.
A time to rent, and a time to sew. Ecclus. iii. 7.
TO RENT. v. n. [now written rant.] To roar; to bluster: we fill say, a tearing fellow, for a noisy bully.
He ventur'd to dismiss his fear,

Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air,
Go mount the winds, and to the shades repair. Pope.
REPAIR. n. f. [repaire, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Repair; abode.

REP

- So 'scapes th' insulding fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air;
There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him downward to his first repair. Dryden.
2. Act of betaking himself to their repair to their houses, and for a preservation of the peace. Clarendon.
REPAIRER. n. f. [from repair.] Amender; restorer.
He that governs well, leads the blind, but he that teaches, gives him eyes; and it is a glorious thing to have been the repairer of a decayed intellect. South's Sermons.
O sacred rest!
O peace of mind! repairer of decay,
Whole balms renew the limbs to labours of the day. Dryden.
REPA'NDOUS. adj. [repandus, Lat.] Bent upwards.
Though they be drawn repandous or convexly crooked in one piece, yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another. Brown.
REPARABLE. adj. [reparable, Fr. reparabilis, Lat.] Capable of being amended, retrieved, or supplied by something equivalent.
The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves and membranes. Bacon.
When its spirit is drawn from wine, it will not, by the re-union of its constituent liquors, be reduced to its pristine nature; because the workmanship of nature, in the disposition of the parts, was too elaborate to be imitable, or reparable by the bare apposition of those divided parts to each other. Boyle.
An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable, and can be made to the wronged person; to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
REPARABLY. adv. [from reparable.] In a manner capable of remedy by restitution, amendment or supply.
REPARATION. n. f. [reparation, Fr. reparatio, from reparare, Lat.]

In this moveable body, the fluid and solid parts must be consumed; and both demand a constant reparation. Arbutnot.
3. Recompense for any injury; amends.
The king should be able, when he had cleared himself, to make him reparation. Bacon.
I am sensible of the scandal I have given by my loose writings, and make what reparation I am able. Dryden.
REPARATIVE. n. f. [from repair.] Whatever makes amends for loss or injury.
New reparatives were in hand, and partly reparatives of the former beaten at feat. Watson's Buckingham.
REPARTEE. n. f. [repartie, Fr.] Smart reply.
The fools overflowed with smart reparties, and were only distinguished from the intended wits, by being called coxcombs. Dryden's Dufresney.
Sullen was Jupiter just now;
And Cupid was as bad as he;
Hear but the younfter's repartee. Prior.
TO REPARTEE. v. n. To make smart replies.
High flights she had, and wit at will,
And to her tongue lay seldom still;
For in all visits who but she,
To argue, or to repartee? Prior.
TO REPA'SS. v. a. [repasser, Fr.] To pass again; to pass back.
Well we have pass'd, and now repas'd the seas,
And brought desir'd help. Shakesp. Henry VI.
We shall find small reason to think, that Abraham pass'd and repas'd those ways more often than he was enforced to do, if we consider that he had no other comfort in this wearisome journey, than the strength of his faith in God. Rel.
If his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Homeward with pious speed repas'd the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey.
TO REPA'SS. v. n. To go back in a road.
Five girdles bind the skies, the torrid zone
Glow with the paling and repassing sun. Dryden.
REPA'ST. n. f. [repas, Fr. re and pas, Lat.]
1. A meal; act of taking food.
From dance to sweet repast they turn Delirious; all in circles as they stood,
Tables are set. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attick taste, with wine.
Sleep, that is thy best repast,
Yet of death it bears a taste,
And both are the same thing at last. Denham.
The day
Had summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.
2. P

REP

- Keep regular hours for repat and sleep. Arbutnot.
 2. Food; victuals. Shakep.

 principal. Arbutnot on Coins.
 To REPA L. v. a. [rappeller, Fr.]
 1. To recall. Out of use.
 I will repat thee, or be well assur'd,
 Adventure to be banish'd myself. Shakep. Henry VI.
 I here forget all former griefs;
 Cancel all grudge, repat thee home again. Shakep.
 2. To abrogate; to revoke.
 Laws, that have been approved, may be again repaid, and disputed against by the authors themselves. Hooker's Pref.
 Adam soon repaid
 The doubts that in his heart arose. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Statutes are silently repaid, when the reason ceases for which they were enacted. Dryden's Preface to Fables.
REPA L. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Recall from exile. Not in use.
 If the time thrust forth
 A cause for thy repat, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man. Shakep.
 2. Revocation; abrogation.
 The king being advertised, that the over-large grants of lands and liberties made the lords so insolent, did absolutely resume all such grants; but the earl of Desmond above all found himself grieved with this resumption or repat of liberties, and declared his dislike. Davies on Ireland.
 If the presbyterians should obtain their ends, I could not be sorry to find them mistaken in the point which they have most at heart, by the repat of the test; I mean the benefit of employments. Swift's Presbyterian Flea.
 To REPA T. v. a. [repeto, Lat. repeto, Fr.]
 1. To iterate; to use again; to do again.
 These evils thou repatest upon thyself,
 Have banish'd me from Scotland. Shakep. Macbeth.
 He, though his power
 Creation could repast, yet would be loth
 Us to abolish. Milton.
 Where sudden alterations are not necessary, the same effect may be obtained by the repeated force of diet with more safety to the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. To speak again.
 The psalms, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be often repeated; but that their multitude permitteth not any other repetition. Hooker.
 3. To try again.
 Neglecting for Creusa's life his own,
Repeats the danger of the burning town.
 Beyond this place you can have no retreat,
 Stay here, and I the danger will repat. Dryden.
 4. To recite; to rehearse.
 Thou their natures know'st, and gav'st them names,
 Needles to thee repeated. Milton.
 He repeated some lines of Virgil, suitable to the occasion.
Waller's Life.
REPA TEDLY. adv. [from repasted.] Over and over; more than once.

 only, but also in repelling their strokes with whom he contendeth. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.
 With hills of slain on ev'ry side,
 Hippomedon repell'd the hostile tide. Pepe.
 2. To drive back an assailant.
 Stand fast; and all temptation to transgress repel. Mit.
Repel the Julian foes, their city seize,
 Protect the Latians in luxurious ease. Dryden's Ranc.
 Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made,
 And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.
 To REPA L. v. n.
 1. To act with force contrary to force impressed.
 From the same repelling power it seems to be, that flies walk upon the water without wetting their feet. Newton.
 2. In phisick, to repel in medicine, is to prevent such an afflux of a fluid to any particular part, as would raise it into a tumour. Quincy.
REPE LLENT. n. f. [repellent, Lat.] An application that has a repelling power.
 In the cure of an erysipelas, whilst the body abounds with bilious humours, there is no admitting of repellents, and by discutients you will encrease the heat. Wifeman.
REPE LLENT. n. f. [from repel.] One that repels.
 To REPE L. v. n. [repellit, Fr.]
 1. To think on any thing past with sorrow.
 God led them not through the land of the Philistines, lest peradventure the people repent, when they see war and they return. Exodus xiii. 17.
 Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I pass'd that bill; nor repentings after. King Charles.
 Upon any deviation from virtue, every rational creature so deviating, should condemn, renounce, and be sorry for every such deviation; that is, repent of it. South.
 First the relents
 With pity, of that pity then repents. Dryden.
 Still you may prove the terror of your foes;
 Teach traitors to repent of faithless leagues. A. Philips.
 2. To express sorrow for something past.
 Poor Enochard did before thy face repent. Shakep.

 1. To remember with sorrow.
 If Diddemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation. Shakep.
 2. To remember with pious sorrow.
 Thou, like a contrite penitent
 Charitably warn'd of thy sins, dost repent
 These vanities and giddinities, lo
 I shut my chamber-door; come, let us go. Donne.
 His late follies he would late repent. Dryden.
 3. [Se repentit, Fr.] It is used with the reciprocal pronoun.
 I repent me, that the duke is slain. Shakep. Rich. III.
 No man repented him of his wickedness; saying, what have I done? Jeremiah viii. 6.
 Judas, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself. Matthew xxvii. 3.
 My father has repented him ere now,
 Or will repent him when he finds me dead. Dryden.
 Each age sinn'd on;
 Till God arose, and great in anger said,
 Lo! it repenteth me, that man was made. Prior.
REPE NTANCE. n. f. [repentance, Fr. from repent.]
 1. Sorrow for any thing past.
 Repentance for sin, such as produces newness of life; penitence.
 Repentance to altereth a man through the mercy of God, be he never so desir'd, that it maketh him pure. Whitgift.
 Who by repentance is not satisfied,
 Is nor of heav'n nor earth; for these are pleas'd;
 By penitence th' eternal's wrath's appeas'd. Shakep.
 Repentance is a change of mind, or a conversion from sin to God; not some one bare act of change, but a lasting durable state of new life, which is called regeneration. Hammond.
 This is a confidence, of all the most irrational; for upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity. South.
REPE NTANT. adj. [repentant, Fr. from repent.]
 1. Sorrowful for the past.
 2. Sorrowful for sin.
 Thus they, in lowliest plight, repentant stood. Milton.
 3. Expressing sorrow for sin.
 After I have interr'd this noble king,
 And wet his grave with my repentant tears,
 I will with all expedient duty see you. Shakep. Rich. III.

REP

- There is no malice in this burning coal;
 The breath of heav'n hath blown its spirit out,
 And strew'd repentant ashes on its head. Shakep. K. John.
 Relentless walls! whose darksome round contains Repentant sighs and voluntary pains. Pepe.
 To REPE L. v. a. [re and people; repeuple, Fr.] To stock with people anew.
 An occurrence of such remark, as the universal flood and the repeupling of the world, must be fresh in memory for about eight hundred years; especially considering, that the re- peupling of the world was gradual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 To REPE RUSS. v. a. [repercutis, repercussus, Lat.] To beat back; to drive back; to rebound. Not in use.
 All in ovens, though it doth boil and dilate itself, and is repercutted, yet it is without noise. Bacon.
REPE RUSION. n. f. [from repercutis; repercussio, Lat. reper- cussio, Fr.] The act of driving back; rebound.
 In echoes, there is no new elision, but a repercussion. Bacon.
 They various ways recoil, and swiftly flow
 By mutual repercussion to and fro. Blackmore.
REPE RUSIVE. adj. [repercussivus, Fr.]
 1. Having the power of driving back or causing a rebound.
 2. Repellent.
 Blood is stanch'd by astringent and repercussive medicines.
 Defluxions, if you apply a strong repercussive to the place affected, and do not take away the cause, will shift to another place. Bacon's Natural History.
 3. Driven back; rebounding. Not proper.
 Amid Camarvon's mountains rages loud
 The repercussive roar, with mighty crash Tumble the fabled cliffs. Thomson.

 When corn was given them gratis, you repined. Shakep.
 The fines imposed were the more repined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding of St. Paul's church. Clar.
 If you think how many diseases, and how much poverty
 there is in the world, you will fall down upon your knees, and instead of repining at one affliction, will admire to many blessings received at the hand of God. Temple.
 The ghosts repine at violated night;
 And curse th' invading sun, and sicken at the sight. Dryd.
 Just in the gate
 Dwell pale diseases and repining age. Dryden.
REP INER. n. f. [from repine.] One that frets or murmurs.
 To REPLA CE. v. a. [replacet, Fr. re and place.]
 1. To put again in the former place.
 The earl being apprehended, upon examination cleared himself so well, as he was replaced in his government. Bacon.
 The bowls, remov'd for fear,
 The youths replac'd; and soon restor'd the cheer. Dryden.
 2. To put in a new place.
 His gods put themselves under his protection, to be replaced in their promised Italy. Dryden's Ded. to Virgil.
 To REPLA NT. v. a. [replanter, Fr. re and plant.] To plant anew.
 Small trees being yet unripe, covered in autumn with dung until the spring, take up and replant in good ground. Bacon.

 The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,
 That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd. Shakep.

REP

- To REPLE NISH. v. n. To be stocked. Not in use.
 The humours in men's bodies encrease and decrease as the moon doth; and therefore purge some day after the full; for then the humours will not replenish to soon. Bacon.
REPLE TE. adj. [replet, Fr. repletus, Lat.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.
 The world's large tongue
 Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
 Full of comparisons and wounding flouts. Shakep.
 This mordication, if in over high a degree, is little better than the corrosion of poison; as sometimes in antimony, if given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours save the parts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 His words, replete with guile,
 Into her heart too easy entrance won. Milton.
 In a dog, out of whose eye being wounded the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in six hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines. Ray on the Creation.
REPLE TION. n. f. [repletion, Fr.] The state of being over-full.
 The tree had too much repletion, and was oppress'd with its own sap; for repletion is an enemy to generation. Bacon.
 All dreams
 Are from repletion and complexion bred;
 From rising fumes of undigested food. Dryden.
 Thirst and hunger may be satisfy'd;
 But this repletion is to love deny'd. Dryden.
 The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion. Arbutnot on Aliments.
REPLE VABLE. adj. [repleibilis, barbarous Latin.] What may be replenished.

 To REPLE VY. } pleur or plegir, Fr. to give a pledge.] To take back or set at liberty any thing seized upon security given.
 That you're a beast, and turn'd to grass,
 Is no strange news, nor ever was;
 At least to me, who once, you know,
 Did from the pound replevin you. Hudibras, p. iii.
REPLICA TION. n. f. [replacatio, Lat.]
 1. Rebound; repercussion. Not in use.
 Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
 To hear the replication of your sounds,
 Made in his concave shores. Shakep. Julius Cæsar.
 2. Reply; answer.
 To be demanded of a sponge, what replication should be made by the son of a king? Shakep. Hamlet.
 This is a replication to what Menelaus had before offered, concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Brome.
 To REPLY. v. n. [replique, Fr.] To answer; to make a return to an answer.
 O man! who art thou that repliest against God? Rom. ix.
 Would we ascend higher to the rest of these lewd persons, we should find what reason Castilio's painter had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St. Peter and Paul's faces: that it was true in their life time they were pale mortified men, but that since they were grown ruddy, by blushing at the sins of their success-fors. Atterbury's Sermons.
 His trembling tongue invoc'd his bride;
 With his last voice Eurydice he cry'd:
 Eurydice the rocks and river-banks reply'd. Dryden.
 To REPLY. v. a. To return for an answer.
 Perplex'd
 The tempter stood, nor had what to reply. Milton.
REPLY. n. f. [replique, Fr.] Answer; return to an answer.
 But now return;
 And with their faint reply this answer join. Shakep.
 If I sent him word, it was not well cut; he would send me word, he cut it to please himself; if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply churlish. Shakep.
 One rises up to make replies to establish or confute what has been offered on each side of the question. Watson.
 To whom with sighs, Ulysses gave reply;
 Ah, why ill-fitting pastime must I try?
REPLYER. n. f. [from reply.] He that makes a return to an answer.
 At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his question, that an aristocracy was better than a monarchy; the replyer did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a question of state: the answerer said, that the replyer did much wrong the privilege of scholars, who would be much streighten'd if they should give questions of nothing, but such things wherein they are practiced; and added we have heard yourself dispute of virtue, which no man will say you put much in practice. Bacon's Apophegm.
 To REPO LISH. v. a. [repolir, Fr. re and polir.] To polish again.
 A hundred clock is piecemeal laid
 Not to be lost, but by the maker's hand
Repolish'd, without error then to stand. Donne.
 To REPO RT.

REP

- To REPO'RT. v. a. [rapporter, Fr.]

- REPO'RT. n. f. [from the noun.]
- Rumour; popular fame.
 - Repute; public character.
My body's mark'd
With Roman frowns; and my report was once
First with the best of note. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
In all approving ourselves as the ministers of God, by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report. 2 Cor. iv.
- Account returned.
We command our ambassadors to make report unto you. 1 Mac. xii. 13.
Sea nymphs enter with the swelling tide;
From Thetis sent as spies to make report,
And tell the wondrous heretofore's court. Waller.
- Account given by lawyers of cases.
After a man has studied the general principles of the law, reading the reports of adjudged cases, will richly improve his mind. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
 - Sound; loud noise; repercussion.
The stronger species drowneth the lesser; the report of an ordinance, the voice. Bacon's Natural History.
The lasting billows make a long report,
And beat her sides. Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyon.
- REPORTER. n. f. [from report.] Relater; one that gives an account.
There she appear'd; or my reporter devis'd well for her. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.
Rumours were raised of great discord among the nobility; for this cause the lords assembled, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these families. Hayward.
If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.
- REPORTINGLY. adv. [from reporting.] By common fame.
Others say thou dost deserve; and I Believe it better than reportingly. Shakefp.
- REPO'SAL. n. f. [from repose.] The act of reposing.
Dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposeful
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee, Make thy words faith'd. Shakefp. King Lear.
- To REPOSE. v. a. [repono, Lat.]
- To lay to rest.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps;
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells. Shakefp.
I will repose myself with her; to live with her hath no sorrow, but mirth. Wisd. viii. 16.
Have ye chos'n this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
 - To place as in confidence or trust.
I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.
That prince was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a sure foundation for that trust he reposed in him, to deliver him out of all his distresses. Rogers's Sermons.
3. To lodge; to lay up.
Pebbles, reposed in those cliffs amongst the earth, being not so dissoluble and likewise more bulky, are left behind. Woodward's Natural History.
- To REPOSE. v. n. [reposer, Fr.]
- To sleep; to be at rest.
Within a thicket I reposit; when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.
 - To rest in confidence.
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shakefp.
- REPOSE. n. f. [reposit, Fr.]
- Sleep; rest; quiet.
Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the curled thoughts, that nature Gives way to in repose. Shakefp. Macbeth.

REP

- TH' hour
- Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
Thoughtful of thy gain, I all the livelong day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse; nor at that of eve Enjoy repose. Philips.
- Caufe of rest.
After great lights must be great shadows, which we call repose; because in reality the light would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden's Dufresne.
- REPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from repose.] State of being at rest.
- To REPOSE'ITE. v. a. [repositus, Lat.] To lay up; to lodge as in a place of safety.
Others reposit their young in holes, and secure themselves also therein, because such security is wanting, their lives being fought. De ham's Physico-Theology.
- REPOSITION. n. f. [from repositus.] The act of replacing.
Being fatished in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it so by deligation. Wesman's Surgery.
- REPO'SITORY. n. f. [repositoire, Fr. repositorium, Lat.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.
The mind of man, not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Locke.
He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers's Sermons.
- To REPOSE'SS. v. a. [re and possess.] To possess again.
How comes it now, that almost all that realm is repossess'd of them? Steuart's State of Ireland.
Her suit is now to repossess those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny.
Nor shall my father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope's Odyssey.
- To REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo, Lat.]
- To reprove; to chide.
All as before his fight, whose presence to offend with any the least unbecomings, we would be sure as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.
Pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shakefp.
They, like dumb statues stand;
Which, when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? Sh.
 - To blame; to censure.
I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice Of Marley-hill. Philips.
Friends reprehend him, reprehend him there;
For what? for stealing Gaffer Gap's gray mare. Gos.
 - To detect of fallacy.
This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty. Bacon.
 - To charge with as a fault. With of before the crime.
Aristippus, being reprehended of luxury by one that was not rich, for that he gave six crowns for a small fish, answered, why, what would you have given? the other said, some twelve pence: Aristippus laid again, and six crowns is no more with me. Bacon's Apophthegms.
- REPREHENDER. n. f. [from reprehend.] Blamer; censurer.
These fervent reprehenders of things, established by public authority, are always confident and bold-spirited men; but their confidence for the most part riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hooker's Dedication.
- REPREHENSIBLE. adj. [reprehensibilis, Fr. reprehensibilis, Lat.] Blameable; culpable; censurable.

 Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.
 REPULSION. n. f. [repulsus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.
 Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another. Arbuthnot.
 REPULSIVE. adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.
 The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton's Opticks.
 TO REPURCHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.
 Once more we fit on England's royal throne,
 Repurchased with the blood of enemies;
 What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
 Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakefp.
 If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descent are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hall's Law of England.
 REPURABLE. adj. [from repur.] Honourable; not infamous.
 If over any vice shall become repurable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself. Rogers's Sermons.
 In the article of danger, it is as repurable to elude an enemy as defeat one. Broom.
 REPUTABLY. adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.
 To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse. Atterbury's Sermons.
 REPUTATION. n. f. [reputation, Fr. from repute.] Credit; honour; character of good.
 Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving; you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. Shak.
 Verily, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.
 A third interprets motions, looks and eyes;
 At every word a reputation dies. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
 TO REPUTE. v. a. [repute, Lat. reputer, Fr.] To hold; to account; to think.
 The king was reputed a prince most prudent. Shakefp.

 Had left me in reputeless banishment,
 A fellow of no mark nor livelihoood. Shakefp. Hen. V.
 REQUEST. n. f. [requeste, Fr.]
 1. Petition; entreaty.
 But ask what you would have reform'd,
 I will both hear and grant you your request. Shakefp.
 Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther. Esdr.

REQ

All thy request for man, accepted son!
 Obtain; all thy request was my decree. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Ask him to lend
 To this, the last request that I shall send,
 A gentle ear. Denham.
 2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.
 Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 Whilst this vanity of thinking, that men are obliged to write either systems or nothing, is in request, many excellent notions are suppressed. Boyle.
 Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now. Temple.
 TO REQUEST. v. a. [requester, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.
 To-night we hold a solemn supper, Sir,
 And I'll request your presence. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 It was to be requested of Almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace. Kap. les.
 The virgin quire for her request,
 The god that fits at marriage feast;
 He at their invoking came,
 But with a scarce well-lighted flame. Milton.
 In things not unlawful, great perfous cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied. South's Sermons.

 By and by the din of war pierce
 His ready sense, when straight his doubled spirit
 Requickens'd what in flesh was fatigued,
 And to the battle came he. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 REQUIEM. n. f. [Latin.]
 1. A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.
 We should profane the service of the dead,
 To sing a requiem and such peace to her;
 As to peace-parted souls. Shakefp.
 2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.
 The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
 With pain produc'd, and nurs'd for future woes;
 Else had I an eternal requiem kept,
 And in the arms of peace for ever slept. Sandys.
 REQUIRABLE. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.
 It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform. Hale.
 TO REQUIRE. v. a. [requiro, Lat. requirer, Fr.]
 1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right, Ye me require
 A thing without the compass of my wit;
 For both the lineage and the certain fire,
 From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet. Speiser.
 We do require them of you, so to use them,
 As we shall find their merits. Shakefp. King Lear.
 This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do; and this the law of God requirerth also at our hands. Spelman.
 This imply'd
 Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway;
 Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
 And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.
 God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded men also to labour, and the penalty of his condition requir'd it. Locke.
 2. To make necessary; to need.
 The king's business required haste. 1 Sam. xxi. 8.
 High from the ground the branches would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.
 But why, alas! do mortal men complain;
 God gives us what he knows our wants require,
 And better things than those which we desire. Dryden.
 REQUISITE. adj. [requisitus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.
 When God new modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former. South's Sermons.
 Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. Bacon's Natural History.
 Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance. Wake.
 REQUISITE. n. f. Any thing necessary.
 Res non parva labores, sed relictas, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life. Dryden.
 For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.
 This God on his part has declared for the requisites on ours, what we must do to obtain these blessings, is the great business of us all to know. Wake.

REQUISITELY.

RES

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences. Boyle.

REQUISITENESS. n. f. [from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscurer passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written so obscurely. Boyle.

REQUITAL. n. f. [from requite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.

Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching? Hooker.

Since you

Wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. Shak. All's well that ends well.

We hear

Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to publick thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital. Shaksp. Meas.

2. Reward; recompense.

He ask'd me for a song,

And in requital op'd his leather scrip,
And shew'd me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

I have ta'en a cordial,

Sent by the king or Haly, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return however, though there can be no requital. South's Sermons.

TO REQUITE. v. a. [from requite, Fr.] To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him. Shak.

He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Sam. xxv. 21.

Open not thine heart to every man, lest he requite thee with a shrewd turn. Ecclus. viii. 19.

When Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will requite us all the evil we did. Genesis 1.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Ecclus. xxx. 6.

Him within protect from harms;

He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim

The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from fight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite;
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,

Great patriot hero! ill requited chief!
REEMOUSE. n. f. [hneemur, Saxon.] A bat.

REERWARD. n. f. The rear or last troop.

RESALE. n. f. [re and sale.] Sale at second hand.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resales, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon.

TO RESALUTE. v. a. [resaluto, Lat. resalutis, Fr.] To salute or greet anew.

We drew her up to land,

And trod ourselves the resaluted sand. Chapman.

To resalute the world with sacred light,

Leucothea wak'd. Milton.

From Pyle resaluting, and the Spartan court,

Horrid to speak! in ambush is decreed Pope's Odyssey.

TO RESCIND. v. a. [rescindo, Lat. rescindere, Fr.] To cut off; to abrogate a law.

It is the imposing a sacramental obligation upon him, which being the condition, upon the performance whereof all the promises of endless bliss are made over, it is not possible to rescind or disclaim the standing obliged by it. Hammond.

I spake against the test, but was not heard;

These to rescind, and peccage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSION. n. f. [rescission, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] The act of cutting off; abrogation.

If any infer rescission of their estate to have been for idolatry, that the governments of all idolatrous nations should be also dissolved, it followeth not. Bacon.

RESCISSION. adj. [rescissio, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] Having the power to cut off.

TO RESCIBE. v. a. [rescribo, Lat. rescribere, Fr.]

1. To write back.

RES

Whenever a prince on his being consulted rescribes or writes back Toleramus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To write over again.

Calling for more paper to rescribe them, he shew'd him the difference betwixt the ink-box and the sand-box. Havel.

RESCRIPT. n. f. [rescript, Fr. rescriptum, Lat.] Edict of an emperor.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus; Use it. Bacon's Aphorisms.

The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did, after the manner of the Roman emperors, write back their determinations, which were stiled rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO RESCUE. v. a. [rescure, old Fr.] To let free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scudamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him and rescued his love. Spens.

My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shaksp.

We're beset with thieves;

Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Shaksp.

Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clar.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily rescue, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superfluity. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Who was that just man, whom had not heav'n

Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave.

Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

RESCUE. n. f. [from rescue.] One that rescues.

RESEARCH. n. f. [researche, Fr.] Enquiry; search.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and bettering of fruits, emptying mines and draining fens. Glarvill's Scept.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more felicity. Holder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Rogers.

TO RESEARCH. v. a. [researcher, Fr.] To examine; to enquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Watson's Buckingham.

TO RESEAT. v. a. [re and seat.] To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you reseat him

Upon his father's throne? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

RESEIZER. n. f. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE. n. f. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture or reseizure: deface the image, and you defest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.] Likeness; similitude; representation.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy maker fair,

These all things living gaze on. Milton.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden's Daphnyon.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore, we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general designs, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

So chymists boast they have a power,

From the dead ashes of a flower,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, Fr.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Molt safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh's History of the World.

The torrid parts of Africk are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations. Brerewood on Languages.

2. To

RES

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,

Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shaksp.

TO RESENT. v. a. [resentir, Fr.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn

And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.

RESENTER. n. f. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Watson.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.] With deep sense; with strong perception; with anger.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. Moë's Divine Dialogues.

RESENTMENT. n. f. [resentment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. Moë's Divine Dialogues.

Some faces we admire and dote on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard. Glarvill.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration, is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glarvill's Scept.

2. Deep sense of injury.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,

Or exercise their spirit in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

RESERVATION. n. f. [reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. King Charles.

We swear with jectitious equivocations and mental reservations. Sanderfon against the Covenant.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

Ourself by monthly course,

With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shaksp. King Lear.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Bro.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me,

In heedful reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they of note. Shaksp.

RESERVATORY. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservoirary as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the prophecies concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [reserve, Fr. reservo, Lat.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Half thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble?

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Sam. viii. 4.

Flowers

Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shaksp.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jer. iii. 5.

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of tempt-tations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter ii. 9.

9

RES

The breach seems like the scissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said: and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind. Locke.

2. Something kept for exigence.

The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillotson.

3. Something concealed in the mind.

However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgement. Addison's Freeholder.

4. Exception; prohibition.

Is knowledge so despis'd?

Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.

5. Exception in favour.

Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve, and which they would fain reconcile to the expectations of religion. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.

Ere guardian thought cou'd bring its scatter'd aid,
My soul surpriz'd, and from herself disjoin'd,
Left all reserve, and all the sex behind. Prior.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not loosely free.

To all obliging, yet reserved to all,

None could himself the favour'd lover call. Walsh.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.

Nothing reserved or fullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryden.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]

1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.

I must give only short hints, and write but obscurely and reservedly, until I have opportunity to express my sentiments with greater copiousness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.

He speaks reservedly, but he speaks with force;

Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. f. [from reserved.] Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity

And their reservedness, their many cautions Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Catalina.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and complement, even a solemn reservedness, which may well consist with honesty. Watson.

There was great wariness and reservedness, and so great a jealousy of each other, that they had no mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon, b. viii.

Diffimulation can but just guard a man within the compass of his own personal concerns, which yet may be more effectually done by that silence and reservedness, that every man may innocently practise. South's Sermons.

RESERVER. n. f. [from reserve.] One that reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are well provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of rain and snow-water. Add.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;

This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;

The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

TO RESETTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.

Will the house of Austria yield the least article, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the minds of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death. Swift.

RESETTLEMENT. n. f. [from reset

RES

- To RESIDE. v. n. [resideo, Lat. resider, Fr.]
 1. To have abode; to live; to dwell; to be present.
 How can God with such reside? Milton.
 In no fixed place the happy souls reside;
 In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds. Dryden's Ensis.
 2. [Resido, Lat.] To sink; to subside; to fall to the bottom.
 Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a drachm of each, turn into a mouldy substance; there residing in the bottom a fair cloud and a thick oil on the top. Boyle.
 RESIDENCE. n. s. [residence, Fr.]
 1. Act of dwelling in a place.
 Something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air,
 To testify his hidden residence. Milton.
 There was a great familiarity between the confessor and duke William; for the confessor had often made considerable residences in Normandy. Hale's Law of England.
 2. Place of abode; dwelling.
 Within the infant rind of this small flower,
 Poison hath residence and medicine power. Shakespeare.
 Understand the same
 Of fifth within their wat'ry residence. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Caprea had been the retirement of Augustus for some time, and the residence of Tiberius for several years. Addison.
 3. [From resido, Lat.] That which settles at the bottom of liquors.
 Separation is wrought by weight, as in the ordinary resi- dence or settlement of liquors. Bacon.
 Our clearest waters, and such as seem simple unto sense, are much compounded unto reason, as may be observed in the evaporation of water, wherein, besides a terreous resi- dence, some salt is also found. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 RESIDENT. adj. [residents, Lat. resident, Fr.] Dwelling or having abode in any place.
 I am not concerned in this objection; not thinking it necessary, that Christ should be personally present or resident on earth in the millennium. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 He is not said to be resident in a place, who comes thither with a purpose of retiring immediately; so also he is said to be absent, who is absent with his family. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 RESIDENT. n. s. [from the adj.] An agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador.
 The pope fears the English will suffer nothing like a resident or consul in his kingdoms. Addison.
 RESIDENTIARY. adj. [from resident.] Holding residence.
 Christ was the conductor of the Israelites into the land of Canaan, and their residential guardian. More.
 RESIDUAL. adj. [from residuum, Lat.] Relating to the RESIDUARY. s. residue; relating to the part remaining.
 'Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residual advantage of the estate left him by the deceased. Ayliffe.
 RESIDUE. n. s. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.] The remaining part; that which is left.
 The causes are all such as expel the most volatile parts of the blood, and fix the residue. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 To RESIST. v. a. [resisto, Fr. resisto, Lat.] To resist again. Obsolete.
 In wretched prison long he did remain;
 Till they outbraved his utmost date,
 And then therein resisted was again,
 And ruled long with honourable state. Poetry Queen, b. ii.
 To RESIGN. v. a. [resigno, Fr. resigno, Lat.]
 1. To give up a claim or possession.
 Resign
 Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held.
 I'll to the king, and signify to him,
 That thus I have resigned to you my charge.
 To her thou didst resign thy place.
 Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jove
 His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.
 Ev'ry Iliad would resign her breast;
 And ev'ry dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.
 2. To yield up.
 Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial ingana-tions from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Desirous to resign and render back
 All I receiv'd. Milton.
 Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.
 3. To give up in confidence. With up emphatical.
 What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God. Tillotson.
 4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.
 Happy the man, who studies nature's laws,
 His mind possessing in a quiet state,
 Fearless of fortune, and resigned to fate.
 A firm, yet cautious, mind,
 Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resigned. Pope.

RES

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.
 What thou art, resign to death. Shakespeare Henry VI.
 RESIGNATION. n. s. [resignation, Fr.]
 1. The act of resigning or giving up a claim or possession.
 Do that office of thine own good will;
 The resignation of thy state and crown. Shakespeare Rich. II.
 He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hayward.
 2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.
 We cannot expect, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.
 There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.
 3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.
 RESIGNER. n. s. [from resign.] One that resigns.
 RESIGNMENT. n. s. [from resign.] Act of resigning.
 RESIGNMENT. n. s. [from resign, Lat.] The act of starting RESIGNMENT. s. or leaping back.
 If you strike a ball sidelong, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resignment in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand aside the body re-percussing, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon's Natural History.
 RESILIENT. adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.
 RESILITION. n. s. [resilio, Lat.] The act of springing back;
 resilience.
 RESIN. n. s. [resina, Fr. resina, Lat.] The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstruum. Quincy.
 RESINOUS. adj. [from resin; resineus, Fr.] Containing resin; consisting of resin.
 Resinous gums, dissolved in spirit of wine, are let fall again,
 if the spirit be copiously diluted. Boyle on Colours.
 RESINOUSNESS. n. s. [from resinous.] The quality of being resinous.
 RESIPISCENCE. n. s. [resipiscence, Fr. resipiscencia, low Lat.]
 Witdown after the fact; repentance.
 To RESIST. v. a. [resisto, Lat. resister, Fr.]
 1. To oppose; to act against.
 All the regions
 Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
 And perish constant fools. Shakespeare Coriolanus.
 Submit to God; resist the devil, and he will flee. Jer. iv.
 2. To not admit impression or force.
 Nor keen nor solid could resist that edge. Milton.
 RESISTANCE. s. [resistance, Fr.] This word, like many others, RESISTANCE. s. is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.
 1. The act of resisting; opposition.
 Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Mac.
 2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.
 The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resists, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.
 Mufick lo softens and diffuses the mind,
 That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.
 The idea of solidity we receive by our touch, and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.
 But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertiae, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium. Newton's Opticks.
 RESISTIBILITY. n. s. [from resistible.] Quality of resisting.
 Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto school-men. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.
 RESISTIBLE. adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.
 That is resistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Hale's Origin of Blanks.
 RESISTLESS. adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.
 Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh's History of the World.
 All at once to force resistless way.
 Since you can love, and yet your error see,
 The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryden.
 She chang'd her state;
 Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.
 Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,
 A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Legit.
 RESOLVABLE.

RES

- RESOLVABLE. adj. [from resolv.]
 1. That may be analysed or separated.
 Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. South.
 As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. Capable of solution or of being made less obscure.
 The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 RESOLUBLE. adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.
 There is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire. Boyle.
 To RESOLVE. v. a. [resolv, Lat. resolv, Fr.]
 1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.
 In all things then are our confusions best resolved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 Give me some breath,
 Before I positively speak in this;
 I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakespeare Rich. III.
 I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;
 And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shakespeare.
Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryden.
 2. To solve; to clear.
 Examine, sift, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
 I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.
 He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Hayward.
 The graves, when they have attained to the knowledge of these reports, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 The man, who would resolve the work of fate,
 May limit number.
 Happiness, it was presently resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers's Sermons.
 3. To settle in an opinion.
 Long since we were resolved of your truth,
 Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shakespeare.
 4. To fix in a determination.
 Good proof
 This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd
 To undergo with me one guilt.
 I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.
Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;
 Nothing retards thy voyage, unless Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden's Persius.
 5. To fix in constancy; to confirm.
 Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
 For more amazement:
 I'll make the statue move. Shakespeare.
 6. To melt; to dissolve.
Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is new concentered, into the state of fluidity again. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 7. To analyse.
 Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimagined, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.
 Ye immortal souls, who once were men,
 And now resolv'd to elements again. Dryden.
 The decretals turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
 To RESOLVE. v. n.
 1. To determine; to decree within one's self.
 Confirm'd, then I resolve
 Adam shall share with me. Milton.
 Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. D. of Pi.
 2. To melt; to be dissolved.
 Have I not hideous death within my view?
 Retaining but a quantity of life,
 Which bleeds away, ev'n as a form of wax Resolveth from its figure 'gainst the fire. Shakespeare.

RES

- No man condemn me, who has never felt
 A woman's power, or try'd the force of love;
 All tempers yield and soften in those fires,
 Our honours, interests, resolving down.
 Run in the gentle current of our joys. Southern's Oronoko.
 When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. To be settled in opinion.
 Let men resolve of that as they please: this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.
 RESOLVE. n. s. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.
 I'm glad, you thus continue your resolve,
 To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Shakespeare.
 When he sees
 Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,
 He straight revokes his bold resolve, and more Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.
 Caesar's approach has summon'd us together,
 And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addis. Cato.
 RESOLVEDLY. adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.
 A man may be resolvedly patient unto death; so that it is not the mediocrity of resolution, which makes the virtue;
 nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Grew's Cynol.
 RESOLVEDNESS. n. s. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.
 This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. D. of Piety.
 RESOLVENT. n. s. [resolvens, Latin.] That which has the power of causing solution.
 In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellents; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Physician's Surgery.
 Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain a most wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
 RESOLVER. n. s. [from resolve.]
 1. One that forms a firm resolution.
 Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that saw that, cannot be thought to have justified that unfincere resolver, that dead faith. Hammond's Praef. Catech.
 2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.
 It may be doubted, whether or no the fire be the genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.
 RESOLUTE. adj. [resolus, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady; firm.
 Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
 The pow'r of man; for none of woman born Shall harm Macbeth. Shakespeare Macbeth.
 Edward is at hand
 Ready to fight; therefore be resolute. Shakespeare Hen. VI.
 RESOLUTELY. adv. [from resolute.] Determinately; firmly;
 constantly; steadily.
 We resolutely must,
 To the few virtues that we have, be just. Roscommon.
 A man, who lives a virtuous life, despises the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persists resolutely in his course. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Some of those facts he examines, some he resolutely denies;
 others he endeavours to extenuate, and the rest he distorts with unnatural turns. Swift's Miscellanies.
 RESOLUTION. n. s. [from resolute.] Determinateness; state of being fixed in resolution.
 All that my resolution to make use of my ears, not tongue, could do, was to make them acquiesce. Boyle.
 RESOLUTION. n. s. [resolutio, Lat. resolution, Fr.]
 1. Act of clearing difficulties.
 In matters of antiquity, if their originals escape due relation, they fall into great obscurities, and such as future ages seldom reduce into a resolution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The unravelling and resolution of the difficulties, that are met with in the execution of the design, are the end of an action. Dryden's Oedipus.
 2. Analysis; act of separating any thing into constituent parts.
 To the present impulses of sense, memory and instinct, all the faculties of brutes may be reduced; though witty men, by analytical resolution, have chymically extracted an artificial logic out of all their actions. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.
 3. Dissolution.
 In the hot springs of extreme cold countries, the first heats are unfufferable, which proceed out of the resolution of humidity congealed. Digby on Bodies.
 4. [From resolute.] Fixed determination; settled thought.
 I th' progress of this business,
 Ere a determinate resolution,
 The bishop did require a respite. Shakespeare Henry VIII.
 O Lord, resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.
 We spend our days in deliberating, and we end them without coming to any resolution. L'Estrange.
 How

RES

How much this is in every man's power, by making resolutions to himself, is easy to try. Locke.
 The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension; that which answers to invention, resolution; and that which, in the phantastick will, is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew's Cosmol.
 5. Constancy; firmness; steadiness in good or bad.
 The rest of the Helots, which were otherwise scattered, bent thitherward, with a new life of resolution; as if their captain had been a root, out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.
 I would unfate myself to be in a due resolution. Shakep.
 They, who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things. Clarendon, b. viii.
 What reinforcement we may gain from hope, If not what resolution from despair. Milton.
 6. Determination of a cause in courts of justice. Nor have we all the acts of parliament or of judicial resolutions, which might occasion such alterations. Hale.
RESOLUTIVE, adj. [resolutus, Lat. resolutus, Fr.] Having the power to dissolve.
RESONANCE, n. f. [resono, Lat.] Sound; resound. An ancient musician informed me, that there were some famous lutes that attained not their full seasoning and best resonance, till they were about fourscore years old. Boyle.
RESONANT, adj. [resonant, Fr. resonans, Lat.] Resounding. His volant touch Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
TO RESORT, v. n. [resortis, Fr.]
 1. To have recourse. The king thought it time to resort to other counsels, and to provide force to chastise them, who had so much despised all his gentler remedies. Clarendon, b. ii.
 2. To go publicly. Thither shall all the valiant youth resort, And from his memory inflame their breasts To matchless valour. Milton's Agonistes.
 Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort. Pope.
 3. To repair to. The sons of light Hafted, resorting to the summons high. Milton.
 To Argos' realms the victor god resorts, And enters cold Crotopus' humble courts. Pope.
 4. To fall back. In law. The inheritance of the son never resorted to the mother or to any of her ancestors, but both were totally excluded from the succession. Hale's Law of England.
RESORT, n. f. [resort, Fr.]
 1. Frequency; assembly; meeting. Unknown, unquestion'd in that thick resort. Dryden.
 2. Concourse; confluence. The like places of resort are frequented by men out of place. Swift's Miscellanies.
 3. Act of visiting. Join with me to forbid him her resort. Shakep.
 4. [Resort, Fr.] Movement; active power; spring. Some know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it. Bacon's Essays.
 In fortune's empire blindly thus we go, We wander after pathless destiny, Whole dark resorts since prudence cannot know, In vain it would provide for what shall be. Dryden.
TO RESOUND, v. a. [resono, Lat. resonans, Fr.]
 1. To echo; to found back; to celebrate by found. The sweet finger of Israel with his psalter loudly resounded the innumerable benefits of the Almighty Creator. Peacocks.
 The sound of hymns, wherewith thy throne Incompass'd shall resound thee ever blest. Milton.
 2. To found; to tell so as to be heard far. The man, for wisdom's various arts renown'd, Long exercis'd in woes, oh muse! resound. Pope.
 3. To return sounds; to found with any noise. With other echo late I taught your shades, To answer and resound far other long. Milton.
TO RESOUND, v. n. To be echoed back.
 What resounds in fable or romance of Uther's sons. Milt.
 What is common fame, which founds from all quarters of the world, and resounds back to them again, but generally a loud, rattling, impudent lye? South's Sermons.
RESOURCE, n. f. [It is commonly written ressource, which see: ressource, Fr. ressource derives it from resoudre, Fr. to spring up.] Some new or unexpected means that offer; resort; expedient. Pallas view'd His foes pursuing, and his friends pursu'd; Us'd threatnings, mix'd with prayers, his last resource; With these to move their minds, with those to fire their force. Dryden.
TO RESOW, v. a. [re and sow.] To sow anew. Over wet at sowing time breedeth much dearth, inasmuch as they are forced to resow summer corn. Bacon.
TO RESPEAK, v. n. [re and speak.] To answer. The great cannon to the clouds shall tell, And the king's rowle the heav'n shall bruit again, Respeaking earthly thunder. Shakep. Hamlet.

RES

TO RESPECT, v. a. [respectus, Lat.]
 1. To regard; to have regard to. Claudio, I quake, Left thou should'st seven winters more respect Than a perpetual honour. Shakep. Meas. for Meas.
 In orchards and gardens we do not so much respect beauty, as variety of ground for fruits, trees, and herbs. Bacon.
 2. [Respecter, Fr.] To consider with a lower degree of reverence. There is nothing more terrible to a guilty heart, than the eye of a respected friend. Sidney.
 Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart Respect that ancient loyal house. Philips.
 I always loved and respected Sir William. Swift to Gay.
 3. To have relation to. To look toward. The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole; whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them. Brown.
 Palladius adviseth, the front of his house should respect the South, that in the first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RESPECT, n. f. [respectus, Fr. respectus, Lat.]
 1. Regard; attention. You have too much respect upon the world; They lose it, that do buy it with much care. Shakep.
 I love My country's good with a respect more tender Than mine own life. Shakep. Coriolanus.
 2. Reverence; honour. You know me dutiful, therefore Let me not shame respect; but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice. Shakep.
 Enneas must be drawn a suppliant to Dido, with respect in his gestures, and humility in his eyes. Dryden's Disgrace.
 I found the king abandon'd to neglect; Seen without awe, and serv'd without respect. Prior.
 3. Aweful kindness. He, that will have his son have a respect for him, must have a great reverence for his son. Locke.
 4. Goodwill. Pembroke has got A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect; No other obligation? That promises more thousands. Shakep. Henry VIII.
 The Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering. Gen. iv.
 5. Partial regard. It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment. Prov.
 6. Reverend character. Many of the best respects in Rome, Groaning under this age's yoke, Have wish'd, that noble Brutus had his eyes. Shakep.
 7. Manner of treating others. You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin to their persons, not errors. Bacon.
 The duke's carriage was to the gentlemen of fair respects, and bountiful to the soldier, according to any special value which he spied in any. Watson's Buckingham.
 8. Consideration; motive. Whatsoever secret respects were likely to move them, for contenting their minds, Calvin returned. Hooker.
 The love of him, and this respect beside; For that my grandfire was an Englishman, Awakes my conscience to confess all this. Shakep.
 Since that respects of fortune are his love, I shall not be his wife. Shakep. King Lear.
 9. Relation; regard. In respect of the suitors which attend you, do them what right in justice, and with as much speed as you may. Bacon.
 I have represented to you the excellency of the christian religion, in respect of its clear discoveries of the nature of God, and in respect of the perfection of its laws. Tillotson.
 Every thing which is imperfect, as the world must be acknowledged in many respects, had some cause which produced it. Tillotson.
RESPECTER, n. f. [respectus, Lat.] One that has partial regard. Neither is any condition more honourable in the sight of God than another; otherwise he would be a respector of persons: for he hath proposed the same salvation to all. Swift.
RESPECTFUL, adj. [respect and full.] Ceremonious; full of outward civility. Will you be only, and for ever mine? From this dear bosom shall I ne'er be torn? Or you grow cold, respectful, or forsworn? Prior.
 With humble joy, and with respectful fear, The list'ning people shall his story hear. Prior.
RESPECTFULLY, adv. [respectful, Lat.] With some degree of reverence. To your glad genius sacrifice this day, Let common meats respectfully give way. Dryden.
RESPECTIVE, adj. [respectus, Lat.]
 1. Particular; relating to particular persons or things. Moses mentions the immediate causes, and St. Peter the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens, and that constitution of the earth, in reference to their respective waters, which made that world obnoxious to a deluge. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 When so many present themselves before their respective magistrates to take the oaths, it may not be improper to awaken a due sense of their engagements. Addison.
 2. [Respectus, Fr.] Relative; not absolute. The medium intended is not an absolute, but a respective medium: the proportion recommended to all is the same; but the things to be desired in this proportion will vary. Reg.
 3. Worthy of reverence. Not in use. What should it be, that he respects in her, But I can make respective in myself. Shakep.
 4. Accurate; nice; careful; cautious. Obsolete. Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pain and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.
 He was exceeding respective and precise. Raleigh.
RESPECTIVELY, adv. [respectus, Lat.]
 1. Particularly; as each belongs to each. The interruption of trade between the English and Flemish began to pinch the merchants of both nations, which moved them by all means to dispose their sovereigns respectively to open the intercourse again. Bacon.
 The impressions from the objects of the senses do mingle respectively every one with his kind. Bacon's Natural History.
 Good and evil are in morality, as the East and West are in the frame of the world, founded in and divided by that fixed and unalterable situation, which they have respectively in the whole body of the universe. South's Sermons.
 The principles of those governments are respectively disclaimed and abhorred by all the men of sense and virtue in both parties. Addison's Freeholder, N° 54.
 2. Relatively; not absolutely. If there had been no other choice, but that Adam had been left to the universal, Moses would not then have said, eastward in Eden, seeing the world hath not East nor West, but respectively. Raleigh's History of the World.
 3. Partially; with respect to private views. Obsolete. Among the ministers themselves, one being so far in estimation above the rest, the voices of the rest were likely to be given for the most part respectively with a kind of secret dependency. Hooker's Preface.
 4. With great reverence. Not in use. Honest Flaminius, you are very respectively welcome. Shak.
RESPECTION, n. f. [respeccio, Lat.] The act of sprinkling. RESPIRATION, n. f. [respiration, Fr. respiratio, from respire, Lat.]
 1. The act of breathing. Apollonius of Tyana affirmed, that the ebbing and flowing of the sea was the respiration of the world, drawing in water as breath, and putting it forth again. Bacon.
 Synops or other expectoratives do not advantage in coughs, by slipping down between the epiglottis; for, as I instanced before, that must necessarily occasion a greater cough and difficulty of respiration. Harvey on Consumption.
 The author of nature foreknew the necessity of rains and dews to the present structure of plants, and the uses of respiration to animals; and therefore created those correspondent properties in the atmosphere. Bentley's Sermons.
 2. Relief from toil. Till the day Appear of respiration to the just, And vengeance to the wicked. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
TO RESPIRE, v. n. [respire, Lat. respirare, Fr.]
 1. To breathe. The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire; The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire, The fainty knights were scorch'd. Dryden.
 2. To catch breath. Where foaming wraths their cruel tasks they whet, And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire. F. 2.
 Is a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw The air imprison'd also, close and damp, Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends, The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure, and sweet, With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.
 3. To rest; to take rest from toil. Hark! he strikes the golden lyre; And see! the tortur'd ghosts respire, See shady forms advance! Pope's St. Cecilia.
RESPIRE, n. f. [respit, Fr.]
 1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence. I had hope to spend Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day, That must be mortal to us both. Milton.

RESPIRE, n. f. [respit, Fr.]
 1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence. I had hope to spend Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day, That must be mortal to us both. Milton.

RES

Wisdom and eloquence in vain would plead One moment's respite for the learned head; Judges of writings and of men have dy'd. P. 1.
 2. Pause; interval. The fox then counsel'd th' ape, for to require Respite till morrow e' answer his desire. Hubbard's Fable.
 This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessity, to make itself appear more honest. Raleigh's Essays.
 Some pause and respite only I require, Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Danham.
TO RESPITE, v. a. [respit, Fr.]
 1. To relieve by a pause. In what bow'r or shade Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd, To respite his day-labour with repast, Or with repose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 2. [Respit, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay. An act pass'd for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, upon the publick faith, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanning. Clarendon.
RESPLENDENCE, n. f. [resplendens, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; splendour. Son! thou in whom my glory I behold In full resplendence, heir of all my might. Milton.
 To neglect that supreme resplendence, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.
RESPLENDENT, adj. [resplendens, Lat.] Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre. Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory. Candian's Remains.
 There all within full rich array'd he found, With royal arras and resplendent gold. Fairy Queen.
 The ancient electrum had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold, and more resplendent. Bacon's Natural History.
 Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Milton.
 Every body looks most splendid and luminous in the light of its own colour: cinnabar in the homogeneal light is most resplendent, in the green light it is manifestly less resplendent, in the blue light still less. Newen's Opticks.
Resplendent bras, and more resplendent dames. Pope.
RESPLENDENTLY, adv. [resplendens, Lat.] With lustre; brightly; splendidly. TO RESPOND, v. n. [respondeo, Lat. respondere, Fr.]
 1. To answer. Little used. 2. To correspond; to suit. To every theme responds thy various lay; Here rows a torrent, there meanders play. Browne.
RESPONDENT, n. f. [respondens, Lat.]
 1. An answerer in a suit. In giving an answer, the respondent should be in court, and personally admonished by the judge to answer the judge's interrogation. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 2. One whose province, in a set disputation, is to refute objections. How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practis'd moderator? More's Divine Dialogues.
 The respondent may easily shew, that though wine may do all this, yet it may be finally hurtful to the soul and body of him. Watt's Logic.
RESPONSE, n. f. [responsio, Lat.]
 1. An answer. Mere natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration. Gro. of the Tongue.
 The oracles, which had before flourish'd, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced. Hammond.
 2. [Respons, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in publick worship. To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a haddock and common prayer book. Addison's Spectator, N° 112.
 3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation. Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.
RESPONSIBLE, adj. [responsus, Lat.]
 1. Answerable; accountable. He as much satisfies the itch of telling news; he as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the truth of his relations. Government of the Tongue.
 2. Capable

RES

2. Capable of discharging an obligation:
The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible. Locke.
RESPONSIBLENESS. n. f. [from responsibile.] State of being obliged or qualified to answer.
RESPONSION. n. f. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.
RESPONSIVE. adj. [responsivus, Lat.] Containing answer.
1. Answering; making answer.
A certificate is a responsive letter, or letter by way of answer. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Correspondent; suited to something else.
Sing of love and gay desire,
Responsive to the warbling lyre. Fenton.
Be there Demodocus the bard of fame,
Taught by the gods to please, when high he sings
The vocal lay responsive to the strings. Pope's Odyssey.
RESPONORY. adj. [responsorius, Lat.] Containing answer.
REST. n. f. [Hebr. rest; Saxon; ruste, Dutch.]
1. Sleep; repose.
All things retired to rest, mind us of like repose. Milton.
My soft limbs are wearied into rest. Pope.
2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.
Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their cars;
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden's Parson.
3. Stillness; cessation of motion.
Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requirerth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

RESUMPTION. n. f. [resumptio, Lat.] The act of lying on the back.
TO RESUMEY. v. a. [re and survey.] To review; to survey again.
I have, with cursory eye, o'erglanc'd the articles;
Appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us, once more with better heed
To resurvey them. Shakefp. Henry V.
- RESURRECTION. n. f. [resurrectionem, Fr. resurrectum, Lat.] Revival from the dead; return from the grave.
The Sadducees were grieved, that they taught, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts iv. 2.
Nor after resurrection shall he stay Longer on earth, than certain times 't appear
To his disciples. Milton.
He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the foul springs forward to the great object which he has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being remitted to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection. Addison's Spectator.
Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a publick fact, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. Watts.
- TO RESUSCITATE. v. a. [resuscitare, Latin.] To stir up anew; to revive.

RET

- We have beasts and birds for dissections, though diverse parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth, resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance. Bacon.
- RESUSCITATION. n. f. [from resuscitare.] The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.
Your very obliging manner of enquiring after me, at your resuscitation, should have been sooner answered; I sincerely rejoice at your recovery. Pope.
- TO RETAIL. v. a. [retailer, Fr.]
1. To divide into small parcels.
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar. Shakefp.
2. To sell in small quantities.
All encouragement should be given to artificers; and those, who make, should also vend and retail their commodities. Locke.
3. To sell at second hand.
The sage dame,
By names of toasts, retails each batter'd jade. Pope.
4. To sell in broken parts.
He is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me. Shakefp.
- RETAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] Sale by small quantities.
The author, to prevent such a monopoly of sense, is resolved to deal in it himself by retail. Addison.
We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,
And selling basely by retail. Swift's Miscellanies.
- RETAILER. n. f. [from retail.] One who sells by small quantities.
From these particulars we may guess at the rest, as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. Hakew.
- TO RETAIN. v. a. [retinere, Lat. retenir, Fr.]
1. To keep; not to lose.
Where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain. Shakefp. K. Lear.
Though th' offending part felt mortal pain,
Th' immortal part its knowledge did retain. Denham.
The vigor of this arm was never vain;
And that my wonted prowess I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.
A tomb and fun'ral honours I decreed;
The place your armour and your name retains. Dryden.
Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it is reasonable to conclude, it can retain without the help of the body too. Locke.
2. To keep; not to lay aside.
Let me retain
The name and all the addition to a King;
The way, beloved sons, be yours. Shakefp. King Lear.
As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge,
God gave them over to a reprobate mind. Rom. i. 22.
Although they retain the word mandrake in the text, yet they retract it in the margin. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Be obedient and retain Unalterably firm his love entire. Milton.
They, who have restored painting in Germany, not having seen any of those fair reliques of antiquity, have retained much of that barbarous method. Dryden.
3. To keep; not to dismiss.
Receive him that is mine own bowels; whom I would have retained with me. Philom. xii. 13.
Hollow rocks retain the sound of blustering winds. Milt.
4. To keep in pay; to hire.
A Benedictine convent has now retained the most learned father of their order to write in its defence. Addison.
- TO RETAIN. v. n.
1. To belong to; to depend on.
These betray upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness. Boyle.
In animals many actions depend upon their living form, as well as that of mixture, and though they wholly seem to retain to the body, depart upon disunion. Brown.
2. To keep; to continue. Not in use.
No more can impure man retain and move
In the pure region of that worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.
- RETAINER. n. f. [from retain.]
1. An adherent; a dependant; a hanger-on.
You now are mounted,
Where pow'rs are your retainers. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
One darling inclination of mankind affects to be a retainer to religion; the spirit of opposition, that lived long before christianity, and can easily subside without it. Swift.
2. In common law, retainer signifieth a servant not menial nor familiar, that is not dwelling in his house; but only using or bearing his name or livery. Cowell.
3. The act of keeping dependants, or being in dependance.
By another law, the king's officers and farmers were to forfeit their places and holds, in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in unlawful assemblies. Bacon's Henry VII.

RET

A combination of honest men would endeavour to extirpate all the profligate immoral retainers to each side, that have nothing to recommend them but an implicit submission to their leaders.

Addison's Spectator.
To RETAKE. v. a. [re and take.] To take again.

A day should be appointed, when the remonstrance should be taken into consideration.

Clarendon.
To RETALIATE. v. a. [re and take, Lat.] To return by giving like for like; to repay; to requite.

It is very unlucky, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger of appearing the first aggressors.

Swift.
If a first minister of state had used me as you have done, retaliating would be thought a mark of courage.

Swift.
RETALIATION. n. f. [from retaliare.] Retalial; return of like for like.

They thought it no irreligion to prosecute the severest retaliation or revenge; so that at the same time their outward man might be a saint, and their inward man a devil.

South.
God, graciously becoming our debtor, takes what is done to others as done to himself, and by promise obliges himself to full retaliation.

Calamy's Sermons.
To RETARD. v. a. [retardo, Lat. retardare, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to obstruct in swiftness of course.

How Iphitus with me, and Pelias

Slowly retire; the one retarded was

By feeble age, the other by a wound.

2. To delay; to put off.

Nor kings nor nations

One moment can retard th' appointed hour:

It is as natural to delay a letter at such a season, as to retard a melancholy visit to a person one cannot relieve.

Pope.
To RETARD. v. n. To stay back.

Some years it hath also retarded, and come far later, than usually it was expected.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
RETARDATION. n. f. [retardation, Fr. from retard.] Hindrance; the act of delaying.

Out of this a man may devise the means of altering the colour of birds, and the retardation of hoary hairs.

Bacon.
RETARDER. n. f. [from retard.] Hinderer; obstructer.

This disputing way of enquiry, is so far from advancing science, that it is no inconsiderable retarder.

Glavin.
To RETARD. v. n. [retardare, Lat. retardare, Fr.] To force up something from the stomach.

RETCHLESS. adj. [sometimes written wretchless, properly wretchless. See RECKLESS.] Careless.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;

Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:

He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,

Grudges their life, from whence his own began;

Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone.

Dryden.
RETENTION. n. f. [retentio, Lat.] The act of discovering to the view.

This is rather a restoration of a body to its own colour, or a retention of its native colour, than a change.

Boyle.
RETENTION. n. f. [retention, Fr. retentio, from retentus, Lat.]

1. The act of retaining.

No woman's heart

So big to hold so much; they lack retention.

Shakespeare.
A forward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing, as an innovation; and they, that reverence too much old things, are but a scorn to the new.

Bacon's Natural History.
2. Retention and retentive faculty is that state of contraction in the solid parts, which makes them hold fast their proper contents.

Quincy.
3. Memory.

The backward learner makes amends another way, expiating his want of docility with a deeper and a more rooted retention.

South's Sermons.
Retention is the keeping of those simple ideas, which from sensation or reflection the mind hath received.

Locke.
4. Limitation.

His life I gave him, and did thereto add

My love without retention or restraint;

All his.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
5. Custody; confinement; restraint.

I sent the old and miserable king

To some retention and appointed guard.

Shakespeare's K. Lear.
RETENTIVE. adj. [retentus, Lat. retentivus, Fr.]

1. Having the power of retention.

It keepeth sermons in memory, and doth in that respect, although not feed the soul of man, yet help the retentive force of that stomach of the mind.

Hooker.
Have I been ever free, and must my house

Be my retentive enemy, my goal?

Shakespeare.
From retentive cage

When sullen Philomel escapes, her notes

She varies, and of past imprisonment

Sweetly complains.

Philips.
In Cotman fields the brethren with amaze

Prick all their ears up, and forget to graze;

Long Chancery-lane retentive rolls the sound,

And courts to courts return it round and round.

RET

2. Having memory.

To remember a song or tune, our souls must be an harmony continually running over in a silent whisper those musical accents, which our retentive faculty is preserver of.

Glan.
RETENTIVENESS. n. f. [from retentivus.] Having the quality of retention.

RETICENCE. n. f. [reticence, Fr. reticentia, from retico, Lat.] Concealment by silence.

RETICLE. n. f. [reticulum, Lat.] A small net.

RETICULAR. adj. [from reticulum, Lat.] Having the form of a small net.

RETICULATED. adj. [reticulatus, Lat.] Made of network; formed with interlitical vacuities.

The intervals of the cavities, rising a little, make a pretty kind of reticulated work.

Woodward on Fossils.
RETIFORM. adj. [retiformis, Lat.] Having the form of a net.

The uveous coat and inside of the choroides are blackened, that the rays may not be reflected backwards to confound the sight; and if any be by the retiform coat reflected, they are soon choked in the black infide of the uvea.

Roy.
RETINUE. n. f. [retinue, Fr.] A number attending upon a principal person; a train; a meiny.

Not only this your all licens'd fool,

But other of your insolent retinues,

Do hourly carp and quarrel.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
What followers, what retinue can't thou gain,

Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,

Longer than thou canst feed them on thy cost?

Milton.
There appears

The long retinue of a prosperous reign,

A series of successful years.

Dryden.
Neither pomp nor retinue shall be able to divert the great,

nor shall the rich be relieved by the multitude of his retainers.

Rogers's Sermon.
To RETIRE. v. n. [retire, Fr.]

1. To retreat; to withdraw; to go to a place of privacy.

The mind contracts herself, and shrinketh in,

And to herself she gladly doth retire.

Davies.
The less I may be blest with her company, the more I will retire to God and my own heart.

King Charles.
Thou open't widom's way,

And giv'st access, though secret the retire.

Milton.
The parliament dissolved, and gentlemen charged to retire to their country habitations.

Hayward.
2. To retreat from danger.

Set up the standard towards Zion, retire, stay not.

Jer.
Set Uriah in the fore front of the hottest battles, and retire ye from him, that he may die.

Arch.
To RETIRE. v. a. To withdraw; to take away.

He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife, and children into a forest thereby.

Sidney.
They, full of rage, retired themselves into this castle.

Sidney.
He, our hope, might have retir'd his power,

And driven into despair an enemy's hate.

Shakespeare's Tempest.
Thence retire me to my Milan.

Shakespeare's Tempest.
There may be as great a variety in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits in the world, as in obtruding them.

Bacon.
As when the sun is present all the year,

And never doth retire his golden ray,

Needs must the spring be everlasting there;

And every season like the month of May.

Davies.
These actions in her closet, all alone,

Retir'd within herself, she doth fulfill.

Davies.
After some flight skirmishes, he retired himself into the castle of Farnham.

Clarendon.
Hydra-like, the fire

Lifts up his hundred heads to aim his way;

And scarce the wealthy can one half retire,

Before he rushes in to share the prey.

Dryden.
RETIRE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Retreat; recession.

I heard his praises in pursuit,

But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

Shakespeare.
Thou hast talk'd

Of fallies and retires, of trenches, tents.

Shakespeare.
The battle and the retire of the English succours were the causes of the loss of that dutchy.

Bacon's Henry VII.
2. Retirement; place of privacy. Not in use.

Eve, who unseen

Yet all had heard, with audible lament

Discover'd soon the place of her retire.

Milton.
RETIRE. part. adj. [from retire.] Secret; private.

Language most flows a man; speak that I may see thee: it springs out of the most retired and inmost parts of us.

B. Job.
You find the mind in sleep retired from the senses, and out of these motions made on the organs of sense.

Locke.
Some

RET

Some, accustomed to retired speculations, run natural philosophy into metaphysical notions and the abstract generalities of logic.

Locke.
He was admitted into the most secret and retired thoughts and counsels of his royal master king William.

Addison.
RETIRE. n. f. [from retire.] Solitude; privacy; secrecy.

Like one, who in her third widowhood doth profess

Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness.

Donne.
So affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.

How could he have the leisure and retiredness of the cloister, to perform all those acts of devotion in, when the burthen of the reformation lay upon his shoulders?

Atterbury.
RETIREMENT. n. f. [from retire.]

1. Private abode; secret habitation.

My retirement there tempted me to divert those melancholy thoughts.

Denham's Dedication.
Caprea had been the retirement of Augustus for some time, and the residence of Tiberius for many years.

Addison.
2. Private way of life.

An elegant sufficiency, content,

Retirement, rural quiet, friendship, books,

Progressive virtue, and approving heaven.

Thomson.
3. Act of withdrawing.

Short retirement urges sweet return.

Milton.
In this retirement of the mind from the senses, it retains a yet more incoherent manner of thinking, which we call dreaming.

Locke.
RETOLD. part. pass. of retell. Related or told again.

Whatever Harry Percy then had said

At such a time, with all the rest retold,

May reasonably die.

Shakespeare.
Upon his dead corpse there was such misuse

By those Welchwomen done, as may not be Without much shame retold or spoken of.

Shakespeare.
To RETORT. v. a. [retortus, Lat.]

1. To throw back.

His virtues, shining upon others,

Heat them, and they retort that heat again

To the first giver.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
He pass'd through hostile front,

And with retorted scorn his back he turn'd.

Milton.
2. To return any argument, censure, or incivility.

His proof will easily be retorted, and the contrary proved, by interrogating; shall the adulterer inherit the kingdom of God? if he shall, what need I, that am now exhorted to reform my life, reform it? if he shall not, then certainly I, that am such, am none of the elect; for all, that are elect, shall certainly inherit the kingdom of God.

Hammond.
What if toy son

Prove disobedient, and prov'd, retort,

Wherefore didst thou beget me?

Milton.
The respondent may shew, how the opponent's argument may be retorted against himself.

Watts.
3. To curve back.

It would be tried how the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous.

Bacon.
RETORT. n. f. [retortio, Fr. retortus, Lat.]

1. A censure or incivility returned.

I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the retort courteous.

Shakespeare.
2. A chymical glass vessel with a bent neck to which the receiver is fitted.

Recent urine distilled yields a limpid water; and what remains at the bottom of the retort, is not acid nor alkaline.

Arch.

Toss and retess the ball incessant flies.

Pope's Odyssey.
To RETRACH. v. a. [retracher, Fr.] To improve by new touches.

He furnished me with all the passages in Aristotle and Horace, used to explain the art of poetry by painting; which, if ever I retouch this essay, shall be inserted.

Dryden.
Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too much:

"Not, Sir, if you revise it and retouch."

Pope.
To RETRACE. v. a. [retracere, Fr.] To trace back.

Then if the line of Tumnus you retrace,

He springs from Inachus of Argive race.

Dryden.
To RETRACT. v. a. [retractus, Lat. retractus, Fr.]

1. To recall; to recant.

Were I alone to pass the difficulties,

Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,

Nor faint in the pursuit.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
Although they retain the word mandrake in the text, they in effect retract it in the margin.

Brown's Vulg. Errors.
If his subtilties could have fatished me, I would as freely have retracted this charge of idolatry, as I ever made it. Still,

Consents, retreats, advances, and then flies.

Granville.
2. To take back; to resume.

A great part of that time, which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was employed in making provisions for bread; and the excess of fertility, which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retracted and cut off.

Woodward's Natural History.
RETRACTATION. n. f. [retractation, Fr. retractatio, Lat.] Recantation; change of opinion.

These words are David's retractation, or laying down of a bloody and revengeful resolution.

South's Sermons.
RETRACT. n. f. [from retract.]

1. Act of withdrawing something advanced.

They make bold with the deity, when they make him do and undo, go forward and backwards by such countermarches and retractions, as we do not repute to the Almighty.

Woodward.
2. Recantation; declaration of change of opinion.

There came into her head certain verses, which if she had had present commodity, she would have adjoined as a retraction to the other.

Sidney, b. iii.
3. Act of withdrawing a claim.

Other men's insatiable desire of revenge hath wholly beguiled both church and state, of the benefit of all my either retractions or concessions.

King Charles.
RETRACT. n. f. [Spenser.] [retraitte, Fr.]

1. Retreat. Obsolete.

The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse unto him, and seeing the business past retreat, resolved to make on where the king was, and give him battle.

Bacon.

RET

To RETRIBUTE. v. a. [retribuo, Lat. retribuere, Fr.] To pay back; to make repayment of.

Both the will and power to serve him are his upon so many scores, that we are unable to retribute, unless we do restore; and all the duties we can pay our maker are less properly requitals than restitutions. Boyle.

In the state of nature, a man comes by no arbitrary power to use a criminal, but only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.

RETRIBUTION. n. f. [retribution, Fr. from retribue.] Repayment; return accommodated to the action.

The king thought he had not remunerated his people sufficiently with good laws, which evermore was his retribution for treasure. Bacon's Henry VII.

All who have their reward on earth, the fruits Of painful superstition, and blind zeal, Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find Fit retribution, empty as their deeds. Milton's Par. Lost.

In good offices and due retributions, we may not be pinching and niggardly; it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged to higgledy and dodge in the amends. Hall.

There is no nation, though plunged into never such gross idolatry, but has some awful sense of a deity, and a persuasion of a state of retribution to men after this life. Saunders.

It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous. Addison's Spectator.

RETRIBUTORY. adj. [from retribue.] Repaying; making RETRIBUTIVE. adj. repayment.

Something strangely retributive is working. Clarissa.

RETRIEVABLE. adj. [from retrieve.] That may be retrieved. To RETRIEVE. v. a. [retriever, Fr.]

If one, like the old Latin poets, came among them, it would be a means to retrieve them from their cold trivial conceits, to an imitation of their predecessors. Berkeley to Pope.

RETROCESSION. n. f. [retrocession, Lat.] The act of going back.

RETROCOPIULATION. n. f. [retro and copulation.] Post-coition.

From the nature of this position, there ensueth a necessity of retrocoipulation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RETROGRADATION. n. f. [retrogradatio, Fr. from retrograde.] The act of going backward.

As for the revolutions, stations, and retrogradations of the planets, observed constantly in most certain periods of time, sufficiently demonstrates, that their motions are governed by counsel. Ray on the Creation.

RETROGRADE. adj. [retrograde, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.]

1. Going backward.

Princes, if they use ambitious men, should handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde. Bacon.

2. Contrary; opposite.

Your intent In going back to school to Wittenberg, Is most retrograde to our desire. Shaksp. Hamlet.

3. In astronomy, planets are retrograde, when by their proper motion in the zodiac, they move backward, and contrary to the succession of the signs; as from the second degree of Aries to the first; but this retrogradation is only apparent and occasioned by the observer's eye being placed on the earth; for to an eye at the sun, the planet will appear always direct, and never either stationary or retrograde. Harris.

Their wand'ring course, now high, now low, then hid, Progressive, retrograde, or standing still, In fix thou see'st. Shaksp. Paradise Lost.

Two geomantick figures were display'd; One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

To RETROGRADE. v. n. [retrograder, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.] To go backward.

The race and period of all things here is to turn things more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

RETROGRESSION. n. f. [retro and gressus, Lat.] The act of going backwards.

The account, established upon the life and descent of the stars, can be no reasonable rule unto distant nations, and by reason of their retrogression, but temporary unto any one. Brown.

RETROMINGENCY. n. f. [retro and mingis, Lat.] The quality of staling backwards.

The last foundation was retromingency, or pissing backwards; for men observing both sexes to urine backwards, or averily between their legs, they might conceive there were feminine parts in both. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RETROMINGENT. adj. [retro and mingis, Lat.] Staling backward.

By reason of the backward position of the feminine parts of quadrupeds, they can hardly admit the substitution of masculine generations, except it be in retromingenti. Brown.

RETROSPECT. n. f. [retro and specto, Lat.] Look thrown upon things behind of things past.

As you arraign his majesty by retrospect, so you condemn his government by second sight. Addison's Freeholder, No 9.

RETROSPECTION. n. f. [from retrospect.] Act or faculty of looking backwards.

Canst thou take delight in viewing This poor life's approaching ruin, When thy retrospection wait Sees the glorious ages past? Happy nation were we blind, Or had only eyes behind. Swift.

RETROSPECTIVE. adj. [from retrospect.] Looking backwards.

In vain the grave, with retrospective eye, Would from the apparent what conclude the why. Pope.

To RETURN. v. a. [retundo, Lat.] To blunt; to turn.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally a very cold part, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke that shall be dealt it, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray on the Creation.

 To Philip's manes did an off'ring bring. Dryden.
REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from revengful.] Vindictively.
 He smil'd revengefully, and leap'd
 Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
 His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
 Gods I accuse you not. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
REVENGER. n. s. [from revenge.] Vindictive.
 1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.
 May be, that better reason will assuage
 The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
 Have secret pow'r to appease enflamed rage. Fairy Queen.
 I do not know,
 Wherefore my father should revengers want,
 Having a son and friends. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
 So shall the great revenger ruin
 Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys's Paraphrase.
 Morocco's monarch
 Had come in person, to have seen and know'n
 The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.
 2. One who punishes crimes.
 What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury. Bentley.
REVENGEMENT. n. s. [from revenge.] Vengeance; return of an injury.
 It may dwell
 In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
 And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. F. &.
 By the percole of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.
REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revenging.] With vengeance;
 vindictively.
 I've bel'd a lady,
 The princels of this country; and the air on't Revengingly enfeebles me. Shakep. Cymbeline.
REVENUE. n. s. [from revenue, Fr. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.
 They privily lend over unto them the revenues, wherewith they are there maintained. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
 And in her heart scorns our poverty. Shakep. Hen. VI.
 Only I retain
 The name and all th' addition to a king;
 The sway, revenue, beloved sons, be yours. Shakep.
 Many offices are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.
 If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs,
 she might have kept that revenue on still. LeStrange.
 His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
 They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest:
 Not to a nation's revenues are paid;
 The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
TO REVERB. v. a. [from reverberare, Lat.] To strike against; to reverberate. Not in use.
 Referee thy state, with better judgment check
 This hideous rashness:
 The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
 Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud found Reverbs no hollowness. Shakep. King Lear.
REVERBERANT. adj. [from reverberans, Lat.] Refounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.
 Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
 And make the babbling gossip of the air
 Cry out, Olivia! Shakep. Twelfth Night.
TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [from reverbero, Lat. reverberer, Fr.]
 1. To beat back.
 Start
 An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
 And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brad,
 That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shakep. K. John.
 Nor doth he know them for aught,
 Till he behold them formed in th' applause
 Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverberates
 The sound again. Shakep.

REV

As the fight of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.
 As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good foil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.
 2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.
 Crocus martis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sul-

 The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villorio, that they dispelled all clouds. Haw.
 2. To rebound.
REVERBERATION. n. s. [from reverberation, Fr. from reverberare.]
 The act of beating or driving back.
 To the reflection of wing back.
 The reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bac.
 The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reflections of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses. Addison.
REVERBERATORY. adj. [from reverberatoire, Fr.] Returning;
 beating back.
 Good lime may be made of all kinds of slints, but they are hard to burn, except in a reverberatory kiln. Mason.
TO REVERE. v. a. [from revere, Fr. revere, Lat.] To reverence; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.
 An emperor often stamp'd on his coins the face or ornaments of his college, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather rever'd as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
 Love shall again revive your pow'r,
 And life a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.
 Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r rever'd,
 And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Prior.
 In my conquest he thy might declar'd,
 And for thy justice be thy name rever'd. Prior.
REVERENCE. n. s. [from reverence, Fr. reverentia, Lat.]
 1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.
 God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints;
 and to be had in reverence of all about him. Ps. lxxviii. 7.
 When quarrels and factions are carried openly, it is a sign the reverence of government is lost. Bacon's Essays.
 Higher of the genial bed,
 And with mysterious reverence I deem.
 In your prayers, life reverent postures and the lowliest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.
 A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryd.
 The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear; an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.
 2. Act of obedience; bow; courtesy.
 Now lies he there,
 And none so poor to do him reverence. Shakep. Jul. Cæs.
 Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence. Ezra. iii. 2.
 He led her easily forth.
 Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
 She reverence did, then bluish'd as one dismay'd. Paisan.
 Had not then the hoary heads rever'd,
 Or boys paid reverence, when a man appear'd,
 Both must have dy'd. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Upstarts the bedlams,
 And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.
 The monarch
 Commands into the court the beauteous Emily:
 So call'd, the same; the senate rose and paid Becoming reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.
 3. Title of the clergy.
 Many now in health
 Shall drop their blood, in approbation
 Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shakep. Hen. V.
 Poetical title of a father.
 O my dear father! let this kiss
 Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters Have in thy reverence made. Shakep. King Lear.
TO REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.
 Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wife;
 At fools I laugh, not fear them. Shakep. Cymbeline.
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves.
 He flew Aetion, but despoil'd him not;
 Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
 Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
 And reverend thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.

REV

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Rogers.
REVERENCE. n. s. [from reverence.] One who regards with reverence.
 The Athenians quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great re-
REVEREND. adj. [from reverend, Fr. reverendus, Lat.]
 1. Venerable; deserving reverence; expecting respect by his appearance.
 Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shakep. Merchant of Venice.
 Reverend and gracious senators. Shakep.
 Onias, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, prayed for the Jews. 2 Mac. xv. 12.

 mission; testifying veneration.
 They forthwith to the place
 Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him reverent. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Meet then the senior, far renown'd for sense,
 With reverent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.
REVERENTIAL. adj. [from reverentia, Fr. from reverent.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.
 That oaths made in reverential fear
 Of love and his wrath may any forswear. Donne.
 The least degree of contempt weakens religion; it properly consisteth in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.
 The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 All look up, with reverential awe,
 At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law. Pope.
REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverential.] Respectfully; with reverence.
 The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from North to South. Brown.
REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverent.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.
 Chide him for faults, and do it reverently. Shakep.
 To nearest ports their shattered ships repair,
 Where by our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
 So reverently men quit th' open air,
 When thunder speaks th' angry gods abroad. Dryden.
 Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
 Only reserve the sacred one:
 Low, reverently low,
 Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:
 To look to hav'n be blind to all below. Prior.
REVERER. n. s. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.
 When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Majorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament. Government of the Tongue.
REVERSAL. n. s. [from reversus, Lat.] Change of sentence.
 The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon's Henry VII.
TO REVERSE. v. a. [from reversus, Lat.]
 1. To turn upside down.
 A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point, if balanced by admirable skill. Temple's Miscellany.
 2. To overturn; to subvert.
 These now controul a wretched people's fate,
 These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.
 3. To turn back.
 Michael's sword stay'd not;
 But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd Satan's right side. Milton.
 4. To contradict; to repeal.
 Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that crimes should have repite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end. Hooker's Pref.
 A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed.
 Death, his doom which I
 To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
 To better life shall yield him. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.
 They seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judged of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

REV

 5. To turn to the contrary.
 These plain characters we rarely find,
 Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;
 Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,
 Or affections quite reverse the soul. Pope.
 6. To put each in the place of the other.
 With what tyranny custom governs men; it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.
 7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.
 Well knowing true all he did rehearse,
 And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
 The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Fairy Queen.
TO REVERSE. v. n. [from revertare, reversus, Lat.] To return. Spens.
REVERSE. n. s. [from the verb.]
 1. Change; vicissitude.
 The strange reverse of fate you see;
 I pity'd you, now you may pity me. Dryden's Aurengz.
 By a strange reverse of things, Justinian's law, which for many ages was neglected, does now obtain, and the Theo-dosian code is in a manner antiquated. Baker.
 2. A contrary; an opposite.
 Count Tariff appeared the reverse of Goodman fact. Add.
 The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense. Rog.
 3. [Revers, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.
 As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor on the one side, so they changed the reverse always upon new events. Camden.
 Our guard upon the royal side;
 On the reverse our beauty's pride. Waller.
 Several reverses are owned to be the representations of antique figures. Addison on Ancient Medals.
REVERSIBLE. adj. [from reversibilis, Fr. from reverse.] Capable of being reversed.
REVERSION. n. s. [from reversion, Fr. from reverse.]
 1. The state of being to be possessed after the death of the present possessor.
 As were our England in reversion his,
 And he our subjects next degree in hope. Shakep. Rich. II.
 A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on. Hammond's Fundamentals.
 2. Succession; right of succession.
 He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends;
 many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompence of services, procured the reversion of his office. Claren.
 Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute. South's Sermon.
 So many candidates there stand for wit,
 A place at court is scarce so hard to get:
 In vain they crowd each other at the door;
 For e'en reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.
REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.] To be enjoyed in succession.
 There are multitudes of reversionary patents and reversionary promises of preferments. Arbuthnot.
TO REVERT. v. a. [from revert, Lat.]
 1. To change; to turn to the contrary.
 Wretched her subjects, gloomy sits the queen,
 Till happy chance revert the cruel scene;
 And apish folly, with her wild resort
 Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. Prior.
 2. To reverberate.
 The stream boils
 Around the stone, or from the hollow'd bank
 Reverted plays in undulating flow. Thomson.
TO REVERT. v. n. [from revert, old Fr.] To return; to fall back.
 My arrows,
 Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
 Would have reverted to my bow again. Shakep. Hamlet.
 If his tenant and patentee shall dispose of his gift without his kingly assent, the lands shall revert to the king. Bacon.
REVERT. n. s. [from the verb.] Return; recurrence. A musical term.
 Hath not musick her figures the same with rhetoric? what is a revert but her antistrophe? Peacham of Musick.
REVERTIBLE. adj. [from revert.] Returnable.
REVERY. n. s. [from reversie, Fr.] Looie musing; irregular thought.
 Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding. Locke.
 If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wise man and that of the fool; there are infinite reveries and numberless extravagancies pass through both. Addison.
 I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reveries of this kind. Pope.

The withered fields revist their cheerful weeds. Wotton.

2. To reinvest; to vest again in a possession or office.

REVISTARY. n. f. [revistaire, Fr. from revist, Lat.] Place where dresses are deposited.

The effectual power of words the Pythagoreans extolled;
the impious Jews ascribed all miracles to a name, which was engraved in the revistary of the temple. Candem's Remains.

REVISTION. n. f. [revistum, Lat.] Return to life.

If the Rabines prophecy succeed, we shall conclude the days of the phoenix, not in its own, but in the last and general flames, without all hope of revistion. Brown.

To REVISTUAL. v. a. [re and vistual.] To stock with victuals again.

It hath been objected, that I put into Ireland, and spent much time there, taking care to revistual myself and none of the rest. Raleigh's Apology.

To REVISTUAL. v. a. [re and vistual.] To stock with victuals again.

So swift he flies, that his revistual eye
Has lost the chafers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

2. To see again.

I shall revist Sicilia; for whose sight
I have a woman's longing. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

3. To consider over again; to retrace; to reexamine.

Sgrais says, that the Æneis is an imperfect work, and that death prevented the divine poet from revisting it; and, for that reason, he had condemned it to the fire. Dryden.

Shall I the long laborious scene revist,
And open all the wounds of Greece anew. Pope.

4. To survey; to overlook; to examine.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Survey; re-examination.

We make a general revist of the whole work, and a general revist of nature; that, by comparing them, their full correspondency may appear. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The works of nature will bear a thousand views and revists; the more narrowly we look into them, the more occasion we shall have to admire. Burnet's Sermons.

To REVISTUAL. v. a. [re and vist.] To reproach; to vilify;
to treat with contumely.

Asked for their pass by every quib,
That list at will them to revist or snib. Spenser.

I read in's looks
Matter against me; and his eye *revist*d
Me as his abject object. Shakep. Henry VIII.

Fear not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revists. Isaiah li. 7.

She still beareth him an invincible hatred, revist him to his face, and railleth at him in all companies. Swift.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Reproach; contumely; exprobration. Not used, but elegant.

I heard thee in the garden, and of thy voice Afraid, being naked, hid myself,—to whom
The gracious judge, without revist, reply'd. Milton.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] One who revists; one who treats another with contumelious terms.

The bitterest *revist*ers are often half-witted people. G. of T.

REVISTINGLY. adv. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] In an opprobrious manner; with contumely.

The love I bear to the civility of expression will not suffer me to be revistingly broad. Maine.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Review; reexamination.

The revist of these letters has been a kind of examination of conscience to me; so fairly and faithfully have I set down in them the undisguised state of the mind. Pope.

To REVISTUAL. v. a. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] To review; to overlook.

Lintot will think your price too much;
Not, Sir, if you revist it, and retouch. Pope.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Review; reexamination.

The author is to be excused, who never, in regard to his eyes and other impediments, gives himself the trouble of corrections and revists. Boyle.

2. Among printers, a second proof of a sheet corrected.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Examiner; superintendant.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Review.

To REVISTUAL. v. a. [revist, Fr. from the verb, reviste, Lat.] To visit again.

These I revist safe,
And feel thy foreign vital lamp; but thou Revist not these eyes, that rowl in vain,
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.

Let the pale fire revist Thebes, and bear
These pleading orders to the tyrant's ear. Pope's Statius.

REVISTUAL. n. f. [revist, Fr. from the verb.] Recall from a state of languor, oblivion, or obscurity.

REV

To REVIVE. v. n. [revivre, Fr. revivre, Lat.]

1. To return to life.

The Lord heard Elijah, and the soul of the child came unto him again, and he revived. 1 Kings xvii. 22.

So he dies;
But soon revives: death over him no power Shall long usurp. Milton.

2. To return to vigour or fame; to rise from languor, oblivion, or obscurity.

I revive at this last sight, assur'd that man shall live. Milt.

To REVIVE. v. a.

1. To bring to life again.

Spot more delicious, than those gardens feign'd
Of reviv'd Adonis. Milton.

2. To raise from languor, infirmity, or oblivion.

Might not revive desire of knightly exercise. Pa. Quench.

God lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage. Exra ix. 8.

3. To renew; to recollect; to bring back to the memory.

The memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas, which after imprinting have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.

4. To quicken; to rouse.

I should revive the soldiers hearts;
Because I ever found them as myself. Shakep.

What first Æneas in this place beheld, Reviv'd his courage, and his fear expell'd. Dryden.

Old Egeus only could revive his son,
Who various changes of the world had known. Dryden.

REVIVUAL. n. f. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] That which invigorates or revives.

To REVIVUAL. v. a. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] To recall to life.

REVIVUAL. n. f. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] The act of recalling to life.

As long as an infant is in the womb of its parent, so long are these medicines of revivification in preparing. Spektor.

REVIVUAL. n. f. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] Renewal of life.

Scripture makes mention of a restitution and reviviscency of all things at the end of the world. Burnet.

REVIVUAL. n. f. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] Return to a state of juncture, cohesion, or concord.

She, that should all parts to reunion bow,
She that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten sundred parts in one. Donne.

To REVIVUAL. v. a. [re and viv.] To recall; to call back.

1. To join again; to make one whole a second time; to join what is divided.

Was reunit to the crown of France. Shakep. Henry V.

2. To reconcile; to make those at variance one.

To REVIVUAL. v. n. To cohere again.

REVIVUAL. adj. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] That which is revivable.

1. That may be recalled.

Howsoever you shew bitterness, do not act any thing that is not revivable. Bacon's Essays.

2. That may be repealed.

REVIVUAL. n. f. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] The quality of being revivable.

To REVIVUAL. v. a. [reviv, Fr. from reviv.] To recall; to call back.

His successor, by order, nullifies
Many his patents, and did revocate
And re-assume his liberalities. Daniel's Civil War.

REVOCATION. n. f. [revocation, Fr. revocation, Lat.]

1. Act of recalling.

One, that saw the people bent for the revocation of Calvin, gave him notice of their affection. Hooker.

2. State of being recalled.

Elaiana's king commanded Chenandra to tell him that he had received advice of his revocation. Howell's Vocal Poetry.

3. Repeal; reversal.

If a grievance be inflicted on a person, he may appeal, it is not necessary to pray a revocation of such a grievance. Ayliffe.

To REVOCATE. v. a. [revocare, Fr. revoca, Lat.]

1. To repeal; to reverse.

That society hath before consented, without revoking the same after. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

When we abrogate a law as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revocate our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea all that were makers of it with oversight and error. Hooker.

What reason is there, but that those grants and privileges should be revoked, or reduced to the first intention. Spenser.

Without my Aurengzebe I cannot live;
Revocate his doom, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

2. To check; to repress.

She strove their sudden rages to revocate,
That at the last suppressing fury mad,
They 'gan abstain. Fairy Queen, b. i. f. 3.

3. To

REV

3. To draw back.

Shame were to revocate
The forward footing for an hidden shade. Fairy Queen.

Seas are troubled, when they do revocate
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

REVOCATION. n. f. [revocare, Fr. revocare, Italian.] Revocation; repeal; recall. Little in use.

Let it be nois'd,
That through out intercession, this revocation
And pardon comes. Shakep. Henry VIII.

To REVOLUT. v. n. [revolut, Fr. revolte, Italian.]

1. To fall off from one to another. It denotes something of pravity or rebellion.

All will revolt from me, and turn to him. Shakep.

Our discontented counties do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience. Shakep. K. John.

Jalon and his company revolted from the kingdom. 2 Mac.

His people hath a revolving and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone. Jer. v. 53.

2. To change. Not in use.

You are already love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt and change your mind. Shakep.

REVOLUT. n. f. [revolut, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Defection; change of sides.

He was greatly strengthened, and the enemy as much enfeebled by daily revolts. Raleigh's History of the World.

If all our levies are made in Scotland or Ireland, may not those two parts of the monarchy be too powerful for the rest, in case of a revolt. Addison's State of the War.

2. A revolt; one who changes sides. Not in use.

You ingrate revolts,
You bloody Nero's, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England. Shakep. King John.

3. Grofs departure from duty.

Your daughter hath made a grofs revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger. Shakep.

REVOLUTED. part. adj. [revolut, Fr. from revolut.] Having swerved from duty.

Thou single halt maintain'd Against revoluted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

REVOLUTER. n. f. [revolut, Fr. from revolut.] One who changes sides; a defector; a renegade.

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
He will accept thee to defend his cause,
A murderer, a revolter, and a robber. Milton's Agonistes.

He was not a revolter from the truth, which he had once embraced. Austerbury's Sermons.

Those, who are negligent or revolters, shall perish. Swift.

To REVOLVE. v. n. [revolve, Lat.]

1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution.

They do not revolve about any common center. Chyrene.

If the earth revolve thus, each house near the equator must move a thousand miles an hour. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

Each revolving year,
The teeming ewes a triple offspring bear. Pope.

2. To fill in a regular course of changing positions; to devolve.

On the deflection of an appeal, the jurisdiction does revolve to the judge a quo. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To REVOLVE. v. a. [revolve, Lat.]

1. To roll any thing round.

Then in the East her turn the shines,
*Revolve*d on heav'n's great axis. Milton.

2. To consider; to meditate on.

You may revolve what tales I told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shakep.

REVOLUTION. n. f. [revolution, Fr. revolutus, Lat.]

1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move.

On their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day Repeated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

They will be taught by the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Space measured by some revolution.

At certain revolutions are they brought,
And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mountings, than the short revolution of a day. Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Watts.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us κατ' ἐξοχην, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

4. Rotation in general; returning motion.

Fear
Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution
On my defenceless head. Milton.

To REVOLUT. v. a. [revolut, Fr. re and vomit.] To vomit;
to vomit again.

They might cast it up, and take more vomiting and revo-luting what they drink. Halewell on Providence.

REVOLUT. n. f. [revolut, Fr. revolutus, Lat.] The act of revolving or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion;

RHE

if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means,
we call it derivation. Wise man of Tensors.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon's Natural History.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head. Temple's Miscellanies.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return.

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Sam. xxiv. 17.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

The supreme being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit and not a reward. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

They have a good reward for their labour. Ecclus. iv. 9.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tilleyson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

REWARDER. n. f. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

RHO

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart's still rhetoric, disclosed with eyes. Shaksp.
His sober lips then did he softly part.

Whence of pure rhetoric whole streams outflow. Fairfax.
Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhetoric.

That hath so well been taught her dazling fence. Milton.

RHETORICAL, adj. [rhetoricus, Lat. from rhetoric.] Pertaining to rhetoric; oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. Mere.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were pretexts of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.

The subject moral, logical, or rhetorical, which does not come under our senses. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

RHETORICALLY, adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

TO RHETORICATE, v. n. [rhetoriceo, low Lat. from rhetoric.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'Twill be much more feasible to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved. Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN, n. s. [rhetoricus, Fr. retor, Lat.] One who reaches the science of rhetoric.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

RHETORICIAN, adj. Suiing a master of rhetoric.

Boldly presum'd with rhetorician pride,

To hold of any question either side. Blackmore.

RHEUM, n. s. [ῥεῦμα; rhume, Fr.] A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth. Quincy.

'Tis not those cunning waters of his eyes;

For villainy is not without such a rheum;

And he long traded in it, makes it seem

Like rivers of remorse. Shaksp.

You did void your rheum upon my beard.

Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,

Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds.

Each changing season does its poison bring,

Rheum chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

RHEUMATICK, adj. [ῥευματικός; from rheum.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watry humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,

Pale in her anger, washes all the air,

That rheumatic diseases do abound. Shaksp.

The blood taken away looked very lily or rheumatic, Floy.

RHEUMATISM, n. s. [ῥευματισμός; rheumatismus, Fr. rheumatismus, Lat.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis musculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy.

The throbbing quinsy 'tis my star appoints,

And rheumatism I lend to rack the joints. Dryden.

RHEUMY, adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,

To dare the vile contagion of the night?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,

To add unto his sickness. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

The South he loos'd, who night and horror brings,

And fogs are shaken from his flaggy wings:

From his divided beard two streams he pours;

His head and rheumy eyes distil in show'rs. Dryden.

RHINOCEROS, n. s. [ῥίνο και κέρας; rhinoceros, Fr.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn in his front.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,

The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger;

Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves

Shall never tremble. Shaksp. Macbeth.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast; as to the rhinoceros an East Indian landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Penham.

RHOMB, n. s. [ῥόμβος, Fr. rhombus, Lat. ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base. Trevoux and Harris.

Save the sun his labour, and that swift

Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd

Invisible else above all stars, the wheel

Of day and night. Milton.

See how in warlike muster they appear,

In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings. Milton.

RHOMBICK, adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

RIB

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the rhomboid in form of a Rar, and they are of a rhombick figure. Greus.

RHOMBOID, n. s. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboides, Fr.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhombick figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Greus.

RHOMBOIDAL, adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhomboidal scelenites of a compressed form; had many others infixed round the middle of it. Woodward.

RHUBARB, n. s. [ῥαβάρβα, Lat.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, fenna, or what purgative drug

Would scour these English hence. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Having fixed the fontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale. Wijemart's Surgery.

RHYME, n. s. [ῥυμος; rhyme, Fr.]

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

The youth with songs and rhymes:

Some dance, some hale the rope. Denham.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,

With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras.

Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes

Prevail as much in these hard iron times;

As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise

Against an eagle soaring from the skies. Dryden.

To kiss her burial.

We make him wound the lover's heart;

But if he takes his bow and quiver,

'Tis sure he must transfix the liver;

For rhyme with reason may dispense,

And found has right to govern sense. Prior.

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did disperse,

As he were warmed with enchanted rhymes,

That offend him he quak'd. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew

Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.

Now sportive youth,

Carol incoherent rhymes with suting notes,

And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

RHYME OF REASON. Number or sense.

I was promis'd on a time,

To have reason for my rhyme;

But from that time into this season,

I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the poetry into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fables. Shaksp.

TO RHYME, v. n.

1. To agree in found.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,

But faggot his notions as they fell,

And, if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.

2. To make verses.

These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason on themselves out again. Shaksp. Henry V.

There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,

Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Duciel.

RHYMER, n. s. [from rhyme.] One who makes rhymes;

RHYMSTER, n. s. a versifier; a poet in contempt.

Scall'd rhymers will ballad us out o' tune. Shaksp.

It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhymers, or news-tellers. Davies on Ireland.

Rhymer come on, and do the worst you can;

I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden.

His rhyme is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhymers, though not a poet. Dryden.

I speak of those who are only rhymsters. Dennis.

So modern rhymers wisely blast

The poetry of ages past

And from its ruin build their own. Shaksp.

RHYTHMICAL, adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmique, Fr. from rhythmos or rhythm.] Harmonical; having proportion of one found to another.

RIB, n. s. [ῥίβος, Saxon.] A bone in the body.

1. Of these there are twenty-four in number; viz. twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back; they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: their extremities, which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head: the cartilages are harder harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intestines: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest: it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the muscular oblique descendens. Quincy.

Why do I yield to that suggestion?

Whole horrid image doth unfix my hair,

And make my hearted heart knock at my ribs. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Against the use of nature!

He open'd my left side, and took

From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm

And life blood streaming fresh. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

He, who fill'd the passage try'd,

In harden'd oak his heart did hide,

And ribs of iron arm'd his side,

Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden's Horace.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,

But I should think of shallows and of flats;

And see my wealthy Andrew deck'd in sand,

Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,

To kiss her burial. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

RYBALD, n. s. [ribaldus, Fr. ribaldi, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribald, with vile lust advanced,

Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,

To spoil her dainty corse to fair and clean. Fairy Queen.

Your ribald nag of Egypt,

The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,

Holts falls, and flies. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The busy day,

Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,

And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shaksp.

N'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,

From flashing Bentley down to pillaging Tibbalds. Pope.

RYBALDRY, n. s. [from ribald; ribaldie, old Fr.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit;

Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than bare-faced ribaldry. Dryden.

The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden.

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,

True nature in her noblest light you see,

E'er yet debauch'd by modern gallantry. Granville.

To trifling jests and fulsom ribaldry.

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneities. Swift.

RYBAND, n. s. [rybande, ruban, Fr.] A fillet of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.

Quint in green, the shall be loose enrob'd,

With rybands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shaksp.

A ryband did the braided tresses bind,

The rest was loose. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

See! in the lists they wait the trumpets found;

Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,

And ev'ry ryband bears some mystick word. Granville.

RYBED, adj. [from rib.]

Furnished with ribs.

Was I by rocks engender'd i' rib'd with steel?

Such tortures to resist, or not to feel?

Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,

Which shrivel'd in its infancy remains,

Like a clos'd fan, nor stretches wide its veins,

But as the seasons in its circle run,

Opens its ribb'd surface to the nearer sun. Gay.

2. Included as the body by ribs.

Remember

The nat'ral bravery of your isle, which stands

As Neptune's park, ribb'd and paled in,

With rocks unscalable, and roaring waters. Shaksp.

RYBON, n. s. See RYBAND.

TO RYBROAST, v. n. [rib and roast.] To beat foundly. A burlesque word.

That done, he rises, humbly bows,

And gives thanks for the princely blows;

Departs not meanly proud, and boasting

Of his magnificent rybraughting. Butler.

I have been pinched in Bed, and well rybraughted under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all. L'Estrange.

RYBWORD, n. s. A plant.

RIC, n. s. Ric denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man; as in their verses of Fortunatus:

RIC

Hilperice potens, si interpret barbarus adfit,

Adjutor fortis hoc quoque nomen habet.

Hilperic Barbarians a stout helper term.

So Alric is altogether strong; Æthelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Optimus. Gibson's Camden.</

RID

RICK. n. f. See REEK.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation
O'erflowed a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born.Mice and rats do great injuries in the field, houses, barns, and corn ricks. *Mortimer's Husbandry.*2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.
In the North they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field. *Mortimer's Husbandry.*RICKETS. n. f. [rachitis, Lat.] A name given to the di-temper at its appearance by Cliffon.The rickets is a distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction. *Quincy.*In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness. *Grant's Bills of Mort.*O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I shoud possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil. *Dryden.*So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busby walks us in a theme,
Whole props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain;But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate. *Prior.*RICKERY. adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the case of rickety children, the diet should be gently astringent. *Art.*RICKLES. n. f. A plant. *Ainsworth.*RICKURE. n. f. [riciura, Lat.] A gaping. *Di.*Rin. pret. of ride.To RID. v. a. [from hebban, Saxon.]1. To set free; to redeem.
It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou halt rid me from the wicked man. Psalms xviii. 49.Rid me, and deliver me out of great waters. Psalms cxlv.I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage. Exodus vi. 6.2. To clear; to disencumber.
They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment. *Hooker.*I must rid all the fens of pirates. *Shaksp.*We'll use his countenance; which being done, Let her, who would be rid of him, devise His speedy taking off. *Shaksp. King Lear.*Upon the word, slept forth Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care. *B. Johnson.*I can put on Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd. *Milton.*Did faints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had uced on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. *Hadibras.*The god uneasy till he slept again, Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain. *Dryden.*At any rate we desire to be rid of the present evil, which we are apt to think nothing absent can equal. *Locke.*The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets on work to get rid of it. *Locke.*The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? *Addison.*The father, seeing himself entirely rid of Theodosius, was not very much concerned at the obdurate refusal of his daughter. Addison's Spectator, N° 164.3. To dispatch.
Having the best at Barnet field,
We'll thither straight; for willingness rids away. *Shaksp.*4. To drive away; to press away; to destroy.
Ah deathmen! you have rid this sweet young prince. *Sha.*RIDANCE. n. f. [from rid.]1. Deliverance.
Deliverance from sudden death, ridance from all adversity, and the extent of saving mercy towards all men. *Hooker.*2. Disencumbrance; loss of something one is glad to lose.
I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus lovers part.
—A gentle ridance. *Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.*By this, the cock had a good ridance of his rival. *L'Estr.*3. Act of clearing away any encumbrances.
Those blossoms, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrown, unfighly and unsmooth,
Ask ridance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

RID

RIDDEN. the participle of ride.He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself. *Hale.*RIDDLE. n. f. [ræbels, Saxon, from ræbe, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.
How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and in charms of death. *Shaksp. Macbeth.*The Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spight Cast herself headlong from the Iliacian steep. *Milton.*Her mother was thinking of a riddle. *Dryden.*2. Any thing puzzling.
'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!
So cowards never use their might,
But against such as will not fight. *Hadibras.*3. [Improbable, Saxon.] A coarse or open sieve.
Horse-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle. *Mortimer's Husbandry.*To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle: as, we say, to lift a question; but their derivations differ.
Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man? *Dryden's Juvenal.*2. To separate by a coarse sieve.
The finest sifted mould must be riddled in. *Mortimer.*To RIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To speak ambiguously or obscurely.Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. *Shaksp.*RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle.
Though like the peffiance and old-fashion'd love, Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state
Is poor. *Dome.*To RIDE. v. n. preter. rid or rode; part. rid or ridden. [Juean, Saxon; rijden, Dutch.]1. To travel on horseback.
Brutus and Cassius
Are rid, like madmen, through the gates of Rome, *Shak.*Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. *Shaksp. Cymbeline.*Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden? *Nunke.*So stands a forest tall of mountain oaks
Advanc'd to mighty growth; the traveller Hears from the humble valley, where he rides,
The hollow murmurs of the winds that blow Amidst the boughs. *Addison's Remarks on Italy.*Let your master ride on before, and do you gallop after him. *Swift's Directions to the Groom.*2. To travel in a vehicle; to be borne, not to walk.
Infected be the air whereon they ride. *Shaksp.*Upon this chaos rid like those that ride the back remains of mankind. *Barnet's Theory of the Earth.*3. To be supported in motion.
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree,
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian cars
To his experienc'd tongue. *Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.*4. To manage an horse.
Skill to ride seems a science,
Proper to gentle blood; some others feign,
To manage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. *P. 2.*The horses I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. *Shak.*Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,
He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease. *Dryden.*5. To be on the water.
On the Western coast Rideth a puissant army. *Shaksp. Rich. III.*The sea was grown so rough, that the admiral was not able longer to ride it out with his galleys; but was enforced to flip his anchors, and run his gallees on ground. *Kneller.*They were then in a place to be aided by their ships, which rode near in Edinburgh Frith. *Hayward.*Waiting him his royal fleet did ride,
And willing winds to their lov'd sails deny'd. *Dryden.*Men once walk'd where ships at anchor ride. *Dryden.*Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides, Way-lays their merchants, and their land besets. *Dryden.*6. To be supported by something subservient.
A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whole nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy. *Shaksp. King Lear.*To RIDE. v. a. To manage insolently at will.
Humility does not make us servile or insensible, nor oblige us to be ridden at the pleasure of every coxcomb.The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden by bakers, cobblers and brewers. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

RID

RIDER. n. f. [from ride.]1. One who is carried on a horse or in a vehicle.
The strong camel and the gen'rous horse,
Refrain'd and aw'd by man's inferior force,
Do to the rider's will their rage submit,
And answer to the spur, and own the bit. *Prior.*2. One who manages or breaks horses.
His horses are bred better; and to that end riders dearly hired. *Shaksp. As You Like it.*I would wish jockies from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine. Bramston.

3. An infertile leaf.

RIDGE. n. f. [from 355, Saxon; rig, Danish; rugge, Dutch, the back.]1. The top of the back.
He thought it was no time to slay;
But in a trice advanc'd the knight Upon the bare ridge bolt upright. *Hadibras.*2. The rough top of any thing, resembling the vertebrae of the back.
As when a vulture on Imaus bred,
Whole snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
Dislodges from a region scarce of prey. *Milton.*His fons Shall dwell to Seir, on that long ridge of hills! *Milton.*The highest ridges of those mountains serve for the maintenance of cattle for the inhabitants of the valleys. *Ray.*3. A steep protuberance.
Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct,
For haste. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.About her coasts unruly waters roar,
And, rising on a ridge, insult the shore. *Dryden.*4. The ground thrown up by the plow.
Thou visitest the earth; thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou fertilizest the furrows thereof. Psalms lxx. 10.The body is smooth on that end, and on this 'tis fet with ridges round the point. *Woodward.*Wheat must be sowed about furrow fourteen days before Michaelmas, and laid up in round high warm ridges. *Mort.*Land for grafs lay down when you sow wheat or rye; but then your corn should be sowed on broad ridges. *Mortimer.*5. The top of the roof rising to an acute angle.
Ridge tiles or roof tiles, being in length thirteen inches, and made circular breadthways like an half cylinder, whose diameter is about ten inches or more, and about half an inch and half a quarter in thickness, are laid upon the upper part or ridge of the roof, and also on the hips. *Moxon.*6. Ridges of a horse's mouth are wrinkles or risings of the flesh in the roof of the mouth, running across from one side of the jaw to the other like fleshy ridges, with interjacent furrows or sinking cavities. *Parriest's Dict.*To RIDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form a ridge.
Thou from heav'nFeign'dst at thy birth was given thee in thy hair,
Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back Of chaf'd wild boars, or rust'd porcupines. *Milton.*RIDGING. n. f. [reus rejcula, Lat. Ans.] A ram half castrated.Tend my herd, and see them fed;
To morning pastures, evening waters led:
And 'ware the Libyan ridgins' butting head. *Dryden.*Tend them well, and see them fed
In pastures fresh, and to their watering led;
And 'ware the ridgins' with his butting head. *Dryden.*RIDING. adv. [from ridge.] Rising in a ridge.
Far in the sea against the foaming shore,
There stands a rock, the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear, Unroll their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. *Dryden.*RIDICULE. n. f. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculum, Lat.] Wit of that species that provokes laughter.Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burden of some merry song.
Touch'd and sham'd by ridicule alone. *Pope.*Those, who aim at ridicule, Should fix upon some certain rule,
Which fairly hints they are in jest. *Swift's Miscellanies.*To RIDICULE. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose to laughter; to treat with contemptuous merriment.I with the vein of ridiculing all that is serious and good may have no worse effect upon our state, than knight errantry had on theirs. *Temple.*He often took a pleasure to appear ignorant, that he might the better turn to ridicule those that valued themselves on their books. *Addison on Medals.*RIDICULOUS. adj. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculus, Lat.] Worthy of laughter; exciting contemptuous merriment.Thus was the building left Ridiculous; and the work confusion nam'd.
It was not in Titus's power not to be derided; but it was in his power not to be ridiculous. *Milton.*RIDICULOUSLY. adv. [from ridiculus.] In a manner worthy of laughter or contempt.Epicurus's discourse concerning the original of the world is so ridiculously merry, that the design of his philosophy was pleasure and not instruction. *South.*RIDICULOUSNESS. n. f. [from ridiculus.] The quality of being ridiculous.What sport do Tertullian, Minucius and Arnobius make with the images consecrated to divine worship? from the meanings of the matter they are made, the casualties of fire, and rottenness they are subject to, on purpose to represent the ridiculousness of worshipping such things. *Stillingfleet.*RIDING. partic. adj. Employed to travel on any occasion.It is provided by another provincial constitution, that no suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparitor, and that archdeacons shall not have so much as one riding ap-paritor, but only a foot messenger. *Ayliffe's Parergon.*RIDING. n. f. [from ride.] A district visited by an officer.RIDINGCOAT. n. f. [riding and coat.] A coat made to keep out weather.When you carry your master's ridingcoat in a journey, wrap your own in it. *Swift's Directions to the Groom.*RIDINGHOOD. n. f. [riding and hood.] A hood used by women, when they travel, to bear off the rain.The palliolum was like our ridinghoods, and served both for a tunic and a coat. *Arbutnot on Coins.*Good housewives all the winter's rage despise, Defended by the ridinghood's disguise. *Gey.*RIB. n. f. An excellent grain. The flowers have no leaves, but consist of several stamina, produced from the flower-cup; these flowers are collected into a small spike, and are disposed almost singly: from the flower-cup arises the pointal, afterward an oblong slender seed inclosed in an husk, which was before the flower-cup: this differs from wheat in having a flatter spike, the corn larger and more naked. *Miller.*August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce aspect, upon his head a garland of wheat and rye. *Psacham.*RIFE. adj. [ryfe, Saxon; rijs, Dutch.] Prevalent; prevailing; abounding. It is now only used of epidemical distempers.While those restless desires, in great men rife,
To visit low folks did much disdain,
This while, though poor, they in themselves did reign. *Sid.*Guyon closely did await Avantage; whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him straight,
And felled oft his blows. Fairy Queen, b. ii.The plague was then rife in Hungary. *Kneller.*Blessings then are plentiful and rife,
More plentiful than hope. *Herbert.*Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife
There went a fame in heav'n, that he ere long Intended to create. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.This is the place, Whence ev'n now the tumult of loud mirth
Was rife, and perfect in my list'ning ear. *Milton.*That grounded maxim
Of wisest men, that to the publick good Private respects must yield. *Milton.*Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal. *Arbutnot on Air.*RIFELY. adv. [from rife.] Prevalently; abundantly.

great fleet. *Kneller's History of the Turks.*RIFENESS. n. f. [from rife.] Prevalence; abundance.He ascribes the great rifeness of carbuncles in the summer, to the great heats. *Arbutnot on Air.*To RIFLE. v. a. [rijsen, Fr. rijselen, Dutch.] To rob; to pillage; to plunder.Stand, Sir, and throw us what you have about you; if not, we'll make you, Sir, and rife you. *Shaksp.*Men, by his suggestion taught, Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
Rifed the bowels of their mother earth
For treasures better hid. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.You have rifed my master, who shall maintain me? *L'Estr.*A commander in the parliament's rebel army rifed and defaced the cathedral at Litchfield. *South.*Mine is thy daughter, priest, and shall remain,
And pray'st, and tears, and bribes shall plead in vain,
Till time shall rife every youthful grace. *Pope.*RIFLER. n. f. [from rife.] Robber; plunderer; pillager.RIFT. n. f. [from rive.] A cleft; a breach; an opening.
He pluckt a bough, out of whose rift there came Small drops of gory blood. Fairy Queen, b. i.She did confine thee
Into a cloven pine, within which rift Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remain. *Shaksp.*In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault; at the end of that is a round house, with a small slit or rift; and in the conduit a window: if you cry out in the rift, it makes a fearful roaring at the window. Bac.

RIG

They have an idle tradition, that a misel bird, feeding upon a seed he cannot digest, expelleth it whole; which, falling upon a bough of a tree that hath some rift, putteth forth the miseltoe.

Either tropick
'Gan thunder, and both ends of heav'n; the clouds
From many a horrid rift abortive pour'd
Pierce rain, with lightning mixt.
Some pick out bullets from the vessels sides,
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift. Dryd.
To RIFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to split.
To the dread rattling thunder
Have I giv'n fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak With his own bolt. Shaksp. Tempest.
At sight of him the people with a shout Rifted the air. Milton's Agonistes.
On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
The green reed trembles. Pope's Messiah.

To RIFT. v. n.
1. To burst; to open.
I'd strike, that even your cars
Should rift to hear me. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Some trees are best for ship-timber, as oaks that grow in moist grounds; for that maketh the timber tough, and not apt to rift with ordinance. Bacon's Natural History.
When ice is congealed in a cup, it will swell instead of contracting, and sometimes rift. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. [Raver, Danish.] To belch; to break wind.

RIG. n. f. Rig, ridge, seem to signify the top of a hill falling on each side; from the Saxon, hrygg; and the Islandick, briggur, both signifying a back.

To RIG. v. a. [from rig or ridge, the back.]
1. To dress; to accoutre. Cloaths are proverbially said to be for the back, and victuals for the belly.

Jack was rigged out in his gold and silver lace, with a feather in his cap; and a pretty figure he made in the world. L'Estrange.

2. To fit with tackling.
He, like a foolish pilot, hath shipwreck'd
My vessel gloriously rigg'd. Milton's Agonistes.
The inner shall set forth like a ship launched into the wide sea, not only well built and rigged; but also carried on with full wind. South's Sermons.

He bids them rig the fleet.
He rigged out another small fleet, and the Achæans engaged him with theirs. Arbutnot on Cæsar.

RIGHT. adj. [right, Saxon; recht, Dutch; ritte, Italian; rectus, Latin.]

1. Fit; proper; becoming; suitable; true; not erroneous; not wrong.

How forcible are right words! but what doth your arguing reprove?
The words of my mouth are plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge. Prov. viii.
The Lord God led me in the right way. Gen. xxiv. 48.
There being no law of nature, nor positive law of God, that determines which is the right heir in all cases, the right of succession could not have been certainly determined. Locke.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is certainly right, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die. Locke.

Our calendar wants to be reformed, and the equinox rightly computed; and being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, by omitting the additional day at the end of every hundred and thirty-four years.

A time there will be, when all these unequal distributions of good and evil shall be set right, and the wisdom of all his transactions made as clear as the noon-day. Atterbury.

2. Not mistaken; passing a true judgement; passing judgement according to the truth of things.

You are right, justice and you weigh this well;
Therefore still bear the balance and the sword. Shaksp.

3. Just; honest; equitable.
Their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant. Psal. lxxviii. 37.

4. Happy; convenient.

The lady has been disappointed on the right side, and found nothing more disagreeable in the husband, than the discovered in the lover. Addison's Spectator.

5. Not left.
It is not with that certainty to be received, what is believed concerning the right and left hand, that men naturally make use of the right, and that the use of the other is a digression. Brown's Vulgar Errour.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.

6. Strait; not crooked.
The idea of a right lined triangle necessarily carries with it an equality of its angles to two right ones. Locke.

7. Perpendicular.
RIGHT. interj. An expression of approbation.

Right, cries his lordship, for a rogue in need
To have a taste, is insolence indeed;
In me 'tis noble, suits my birth and state. Pope.

RIGHT. adv.
1. Properly; justly; exactly; according to truth.

Then shall the right aiming thunder-bolts go abroad, and from the clouds, as from a well-drawn bow, shall they fly to the mark. Wisd. v. 21.

With strict discipline instructed right,
Have learn'd to use your arms before you fight. Rescuer.

Take heed you steer your vessel right, my son,
This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment sinks you. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

To understand political power right, and derive it from its original, we must consider what state all men are naturally in, and that is a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons. Locke.

2. In a direct line.
Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Proverbs iv. 25.

Ye shall be driven out right forth, and none shall gather up him that wandereth. Jer. xlix. 5.

The people pass'd over right against Jericho. Jos. iii. 16.
Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; for ants go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way from a flowery heath to their hives. Bacon.

This way, right down to Paradise descend. Milton.

3. In a great degree; very. Now obsolete.
I gat me to my Lord right humbly. Psal. xxxix. 8.

Right noble princes,
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens. Shaksp. Rich. III.

Pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion and right christian zeal, Shaksp.
I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant is become. Shaksp. Henry VI.

God shall help her right early. Psal. xlii. 5.
The senate will smart deep
For your upbraidings, I should be right sorry
To have the means for to be veng'd on you, Benj. Johnson.

As I shall shortly on them.
Right many a widow his keen blade,
And many fatherless, had made. Hudibras, p. 1.

4. It is still used in titles: as, right honourable; right reverend.
I mention the right honourable Thomas Howard lord high marshal. Peacham on Dressing.

RIGHT. n. f.
1. Justice; not wrong.

Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising; for it seemeth but right done to their birth.
In the midst of your inveighs, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters. Bacon.

One rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgement from above. Milton's Par. Lost.

Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right. Dryden.
He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more effectual course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind.

2. Freedom from error.
Seldom your opinions err;
Your eyes are always in the right. Prior.

3. Just claim.
The Roman citizens were, by the sword, taught to acknowledge the pope their lord, though they knew not by what right. Raleigh's Essay.

The proud tyrant would many times say, that whatsoever belonged unto the empire of Rome, was of right his, for as much as he was possessor of the imperial scepter, which his great grandfather Mahomet had by law of arms won from Constantine. Kneller's History of the Turin.

Subdue by force, all who refuse
Right reason for their law; and for their king Messiah, who by right of merit reigns. Milton.

My

RIG

My right to it appears.
By long possession of eight hundred years. Dryden.

The Might and right are inseparable in the opinion of the world. L'Estrange's Fables.

Descriptions, figures, and fables must be in all heroic poems; every poet hath as much right to them, as every man hath to air. Dryden.

Judah pronounced sentence of death against Thamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it. Locke.

Agrippa is generally ranged in sets of medals among the the emperors; as some among the empresses have no other right. Addison.

4. That which justly belongs to one.
To thee doth the right of her appertain, seeing thou only art of her kindred. Tob. vi. 11.

The custom of employing these great persons in all great offices, passes for a right. Temple.

The pris'ner freed himself by nature's laws,
Born free, he fought his right. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

5. Property; interest.
A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight. Dryden.

6. Power; prerogative.
God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks: but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right. Tillotson.

7. Immunity; privilege.
The citizens,
Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shews. Shaksp.

Their only thoughts and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law. Clarendon.

8. The side not left.
On his right
The radiant image of his glory fat,
His only son. Milton.

9. To RIGHTS. In a direct line; straight.
These strata falling, the whole tract sinks down to rights into the abyss, and is swallowed up by it. Woodward.

10. To RIGHTS. Deliverance from error.
Several have gone about to inform them, and set them to rights; but want of that knowledge of the present system of nature, have not given the satisfaction expected. Woodw.

To RIGHT. v. a. To do justice to; to establish in possessions justly claimed; to relieve from wrong.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly. Shaksp.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and bound to restitution. Taylor.

I could not expedient see,
On this side death, to right our family. Waller.

Make my father known,
To right my honour, and redeem your own. Dryden.

RIGHTOUS. adj. [righteous, Saxon; whence rightness in old authors, and rightness in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation.]

1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.
That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked. Gen.

2. Equitable.
Kill my rival too; for he no less Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will bless. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUSLY. adv. [from righteous.] Honestly; virtuously.
Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from righteous.] Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness.
The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults. Hobbes.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th' avenging deities. Dry.

RIGHTFUL. adj. [right and full.]

1. Having the right; having the just claim.
As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

Some will mourn in athes, some coal black,
For the depopling of a rightful king. Shaksp. Rich. II.

2. Honest; just.
Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightness/ causes down to tread: Fairy Queen.
Gather all the smiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded Patriots and kings in rightful wars. Prior.

RIG

RIGHTFULLY. adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not found, but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York. Dryden's Preface to Fables.

RIGHT-HAND. n. f. Not the left.
The rank of officers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place. Shaksp.

RIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from rightful.] Moral rectitude.
But still although we fall of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest rightfulness. Sid.

RIGHTLY. adv. [from right.]
1. According to truth; properly; suitably; not erroneously.
Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and earth beneath. Milton.

Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. vii.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men. Milton.

A man can never have so certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true. Locke.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine, Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Honestly; uprightly.
Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think. Shaksp.

3. Exactly.
Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd. Dryden.

4. Straitly; directly.
We with one end; but differ in order and way, that leadeth rightly to that end. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

RIGHTNESS. n. f. [from right.]

1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude.
It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion, as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting. South.

Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Straitness.
Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance. Bacon's Natural History.

RIGID. adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Latin.]

1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.
A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight. Ray on the Creation.

2. Severe; inflexible.
His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair. Denham.

3. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.
Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die. Milton.

Cressy plains
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwitthood Could do in rigid fight. Philips.

RIGIDITY. n. f. [rigiditas, Fr. from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.
Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance in order to the preservation of health; it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions; rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.
This severe observation of nature, by the one in her comeliness, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Wotton's Architecture.

RIGIDLY. adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.
2. Severely; inflexibly.

RIGIDNESS. n. f. [from rigid.] Severity; inflexibility.

RIGIDLY.

RIM

RIGLET. n. f. [rigulet, Fr.] A flat thin square piece of wood. Thus the pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets. Mex.

RIGOL. n. f. A circle. Used in Shakespeare for a diadem. This sleep is found; this is a sleep, That, from this golden rigol, hath divorc'd So many English kings. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

RIGOUR. n. f. [rigor, Latin.] 1. Cold; stiffness. The rest his look Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milton.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold. A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease; during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Arb.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others. Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham's Sephy.

Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarif. 4. Severity of conduct. Does not looseness of life, and a want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Sprat.

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison's Remarks on Italy. 5. Strictness; unabated exactness. It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the efficient; but are names expressing our passions. Glanvill. The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour.

This awes an impious bold offending world. Addison. 6. Rage; cruelty; fury. He at his foe with furious rigour smites, That strongest oak might seem to overthrow, That stroke upon his shield so heavy lights, That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Fairy Queen.

Driven by the necessities of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness. The stones the rigor of their kind expel, And fuddle into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigour.] Severe; allowing no abatement. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands; he hath resisted laws, And therefore law shall scorn him further trial, Than the severity of publick power. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers's Sermons. RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.] Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Left they faint At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd, For I behold them soften'd, and with tears Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.

The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

RILL. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet. May thy brimmed waves from this Their full tribute never miss, From a thousand petty rills, That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.

To RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams. Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy, Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake, Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.

RILLET. n. f. [corrupted from rivulet.] A small stream. A creek of Ose, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

RIM. n. f. [rima, Saxon.] 1. A border; a margin. It keeps of the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Grew.

2. That which encircles something else. We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The drum-maker uses it for rims. Martimer's Husbandry. RIME. n. f. [hym, Saxon.] 1. Hoar frost. Breathing upon a glass giveth a dew; and in rime frosts you shall find drops of dew upon the inside of glass windows. Bacon's Natural History.

RIN

In a hoar frost, a rime, is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another. Grew.

2. [Rima, Lat.] A hole; a chink. Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rime or chink of their larynx, so as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To RIME. v. n. [from the noun.] To freeze with hoar frost. To RIMPLE. v. a. To pucker; to contract into corrugations. See CRUMPLE and RUMPLE.

The skin was tense, also rimpled and blistered. Wifeman. RIMY. adj. [from rime.] Steamy; foggy; misty. The air is now cold, hot, dry, or moist; and then thin, thick, foggy, rimy, or poisonous. Harvey.

RIND. n. f. [rind, Saxon; rind, Dutch.] Bark; husk. Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard, Crying, O spare with guilty hands to tear My tender sides in this rough rind embard. Fairy Queen.

Within the infant rind of this small flower Poison hath resilience, and medicine power. Shakespeare.

These plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off. Boyle.

Others whose fruit, burnish'd with golden rind, Hung amiable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of this mind With all thy charms, although this corporal rind Thou hast immanac'd. Milton.

This monument, thy maiden beauty's due, High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view; On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.

To RIND. v. n. [from the noun.] To decorticate; to bark; to husk. RING. n. f. [hryn, Saxon.] 1. A circle; an orbicular line. In this habit Met I my father with his bleeding ring, Their precious gems new lost. Shakespeare.

Her blows not shook but rivetted his throne. Dryden.
Thus hath God not only rivetted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being needful to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Till.
If the eye sees those things rivetted, which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake. Loki.
Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which choice maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and river. Loki.
Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs. Congress.
They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, flopping from your horse, Rivet the panting fave to the ground. Addison's Cato.

lings and six-pence sterling. Ditt.
ROACH. n. s. [from rutulus, Lat. red-haired.]
A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste:
his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton's Angler.
If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.
ROAD. n. s. [from radis, Fr.]
1. Large way; path.
Would you not think him a madman, who, whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of ways? Sackling.
To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.
To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Loki.
Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By different roads and adverse ways proceed,
That here they might encounter, here unite. Blackmore.
There is but one road by which to climb up. Addison.
2. [Rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.

with grey or white spots interspersed very thick. Farr. Dict.
To ROAR. v. n. [from rojan, Saxon.]
1. To cry as a lion or other wild beast.
Roaring bulls he would him make to tame. Spenser.
Warwick and Montague,
That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd. Shakep.
Have I not in my time heard lions roar? Shakep.
The young lions roared upon him and yelled. Jer. ii. 15.
The death of Daphnis woods and hills deplore,
They cast the found to Libya's desert shore;
The Libyan lions hear, and hearing roar. Dryden.
2. To cry in distress.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Sole on the barren sands the furr'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.
3. To sound as the wind or sea.
South, East, and West, with mix'd confusion roar,
And rowl the foaming billows to the shore. Dryden.
Loud as the wolves on Orcas' stormy steep,
Howl to the roaring of the northern deep. Pope.
4. To make a loud noise.
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar. Milton.
Consider what fatigues I've known,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches rear'd. Gay.
ROAR. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The cry of the lion or other beast.
2. An outcry of distress.
3. A clamour of merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a rear? Shakep. Hamlet.
4. The sound of the wind or sea.
5. Any loud noise.
Deep throated engines belch'd, whose rear
Imbowel'd with outrageous noise the air. Milton.
Oft on a flat of riling ground,
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd floor,
Swinging flow with fallen rear. Milton.
When cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their rear. Waller.
The waters, lift'ning to the trumpet's rear,
Obey the summons, and forsake the shore. Dryden.
ROAR. adj. [better roary; rores, Lat.] Dewy.
On Lebanon his foot he set,
And shook his wings with roary May dews wet. Fairfax.
To ROAST. v. a. [from rostin, Fr. rosten, German; zspozroed, Saxon, roasted; from rostrum, Lat. a grate; to roast, being,
in its original sense, to broil on a gridiron.]
1. To dress meat, by turning it round before the fire.
He roasteth not that which he took in hunting. D. of Piety.
Roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office.
Swift's Directions to the Cook.

ROB

2. To impart dry heat to flesh.
Here elements have lost their uses,
Air ripens not, nor earth produces;
Fire will not roast, nor water boil. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. To dress at the fire without water.
In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned. Bacon's Natural History.
4. To heat any thing violently.
Roasted in wrath and fire,
He thus o'erlized with coagulate gore,
Old Priam feeks. Shakespeare.
ROAST. for roasted.
He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a filoin. Addison's Spectator, No 517.
And if Dan Congreve judges right,
Roast beef and ale make Britons fight. Prior.
It warns the cook-maid, not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn. Swift's Miscel.
To rule the ROAST. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps originally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.
The new-made duke, that rules the roast. Shakespeare.
Where champions ruleth the roist,
There dailie disorder is moit. Tusser's Husbandry.
Alma flap-dash, is all again
In ev'ry finew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where the rules the roist. Prior.
ROB. n. s. [I believe Arabic.] Insipidated juices.
The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob, extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion. Ambrosius on Aliments.
To ROB. v. a. [from rober, old Fr. robbar, Italian.]
1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder. To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft secret or violent; to rob, is to take away by unlawful violence; and to steal, is to take away privately.
Is't not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
But thou wilt brave me with these fawcy terms? Shakespeare.
Our fins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion. Dry.
The water nymphs lament their empty urns, Becotia, rob'd of silver Dirce, mourns. Addison.
2. To set free; to deprive of something bad. Ironical.
Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Did'st rob it of some taste of tediousness. Shakespeare.
3. To take away unlawfully.
Better be disdain'd of all, than fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakespeare.
Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away. Bacon's Natural History.
Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus assuming all, he robs from you. Dryden.
Oh double sacrifice on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deface the shrine! Dryden.
ROBBERY. n. s. [from rob.] A thief; one that robs by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Barabbas was a robber. St. John.
Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Acalon; then, like a robber, strip'd'st them
Of their robes. Milton's Agonistes.
The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the goal, and from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.
Bold Prometheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing track pursue. Dryden's Horace.
ROBBERY. n. s. [from rob, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.
A storm or robbery
Shook down my mellow hangings. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
I hate robbery for burnt-offering. Isaiah lxi. 8.
Some more effectual way might be found, for suppressing common thefts and robberies. Temple.
ROBE. n. s. [from roba, Fr. roba, Italian; rauba, low Lat.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.
Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Rags and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare. King Lear.
22 A My

ROC

- My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies, Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shaksp.
The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore. Dryden.
How by the finest art the native robe
To weave. Thomson's Autumn.
To ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.
What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform rites and observances. Bacon.
There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans. Pope's Temple of Fame.
Rob'd in loose array she came to bathe. Thomson.
ROBERT. n. f. An herb. Ainsl.

called from Robinhood, a famous robber. Roy on the Creation.
ROBIN. n. f. [from robin, Lat.] A bird so named ROBIN-RED-BREAST. from his red breast.
Up a grove did spring, green as in May,
When April had been moist; upon whose bushes
The pretty robins, nightingales, and thrushes Warbled their notes. Suckling.
The robin-red-breast, till of late had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest. Pope.
ROBUST. adj. [from robustus, Lat.] Made of oak. Dict.
ROBUSTIOUS. adj. [from robustus, Lat. robustus, Fr.]
1. Strong; sinewy; vigorous; forceful.
These redundant locks,
Robustious to no purpose, clustering down,
Vain monument of strength. Milton's Agnoscite.
2. Boisterous; violent; unwieldy.
The men sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on. Shaksp. Henry V.
It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shaksp. Hamlet.
While I was managing this young robustious fellow, that old spark, who was nothing but skin and bone, split through my fingers. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Romp-loving miss
Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson's Autumn.
3. Requiring strength.
The tenderness of a sprain remains a good while after, and leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.
4. Robustious is now only used in low language, and in a sense of contempt.
ROBUSTNESS. n. f. [from robustus.] Strength; vigour.
Beef may confer a robustness on my son's limbs, but will hebetate his intellects. Arbutnot and Pope.
ROCAMBOLE. n. f. See GARLICK.
Rocamble is a sort of wild garlick, otherwise called Spanish garlick; the feed is about the bigness of ordinary peas. Mart.
Garlick, rocambole, and onions abound with a pungent volatile salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.
ROCHE-ALUM. n. f. [from roche, Fr. a rock.] A purer kind of alum.
Roch-alum is also good. Mortimer's Husbandry.
ROCHET. n. f. [from rochet, Fr. rochetum, from roccus, low Lat. a coat.]
1. A surplice; the white upper garment of the priest officiating.
What zealous phrenzy did the senate seize,
That tare the rochet to such rags as these? Cleveland.
2. [from rochet, Lat.] A fish.
ROCK. n. f. [from rocca, Fr. rocca, Italian.]
1. A vast mass of stone.
The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking fands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shaksp.
There be rock herbs; but those are where there is some mould. Bacon's Natural History.
Distilling some of the tincted liquor, all that came over was as limpid and colourless as rock water, and the liquor remaining in the vessel deeply ceruleous. Boyle.
These lesser rocks, or great bulky fones, are they not manifest fragments? Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Of amber a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock amber. Woodward on Fossils.
Pigeons or doves are of several sorts; as wood pigeons and rock pigeons. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Ye darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclind,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.
2. Protection; defence. A scriptural sense.
Though the reeds of Egypt break under the hand of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. King Charles.

ROC

3. [from rocca, Italian; rocca, Spanish; rocca, Dutch.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twisting a ball below.
A learned and a manly soul
I purpos'd her; that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the sheers, controul
Of destiny, and spin her own free hous. Benj. Johnson.
On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace. Dryden.
To ROCK. v. a. [from rocca, Fr.]
1. To shake; to move backwards and forwards.
If, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the smoke were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.
The wind was laid; the whistling found
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.
A living tortoise, being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Roy on the Creation.
2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.
Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shaksp.
Leaning her head upon my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep. Suckling.
My bloody resolutions,
Like sick and froward children,
Were rock'd asleep by reason. Denham.
While his fierce soul on Flanders preys,
He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain. Dryden.
High in his hall, rock'd in a chair of state,
The king with his tempestuous council fate. Dryden.

Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain! Shaksp.
To ROCK. v. n. To be violently agitated; to reel to and fro.
The rocking town
Supplants their footsteps; to and fro they reel Astonish'd. Philips.
I like this rocking of the battlements. Young's Revenge.
ROCK-DOE. n. f. A species of deer.
The rock-doe breeds chiefly upon the Alps: a creature of admirable swiftness; and may probably be that mentioned in the book of Job: her horns grow sometimes to far backward, as to reach over her buttocks. Grew's Museum.
ROCK-RUBY. n. f. A name given improperly by lapidaries and jewellers to the garnet, when it is of a very strong, but not deep red, and has a fair cast of the blue. Hill on Fossils.
Rock-ruby is of a deep red, and the hardest of all the kinds.
Woodward on Fossils.
ROCK-SALT. n. f. Mineral salt.
Two pieces of transparent rock-salt; one white, the other
red. Woodward on Fossils.
ROCKET. n. f. [from rocca.] One who rocks the cradle.
His fellow, who the narrow bed had kept,
Was weary, and without a rocket slept. Dryden.
ROCKET. n. f. [from rocca, Italian.] An artificial firework, being a cylindrical case of paper filled with nire, charcoal, and sulphur, and which mounts in the air to a considerable height, and there bursts.
Every rocket ended in a constellation, throwing the air with a shower of silver spangles. Addison.
When bonfires blaze, your vagrant works shall rise
In rockets, till they reach the wondrous skies. Garth.
ROCKET. n. f. A plant.
The flower of the rocket consists of four leaves expanded in form of a cross; the point becomes a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides: these cells are full of roundish seeds; to which may be added, the whole plant hath a peculiar field smell. Miller.
Rocket is one of the fillet furniture. Mortimer's Husbandry.
ROCKLESS. adj. [from rocca.] Being without rocks.
A crystal brook
Is weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.

Such destruction to withstand, he oppos'd the rocky orb
Of tenfold adamant, his ample shield. Milton.
3. Hard; stony; obdurate.
I like a poor bark, of sails and tackling rest,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bottom. Shaksp. Rich. III.
ROG. n. f. [from rocca, Dutch.]
1. A long twig.
Some chafe a hazel rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.
2. A kind of scepter.
Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
3. Any thing long and slender.
The pall'ral reed of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.
Let the fisherman
Increase his tackle, and his rod retie.
Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love braves all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven-defying Enclade. Granville.
4. An instrument for measuring.
Decampeda was a measuring rod for taking the dimensions of buildings, and signified the same thing as peritica, taken as a measure of length. Arbutnot on Coins.
5. An instrument of correction, made of twigs tied together.
If he be but once so taken idly roguing, he may punish him with stocks; but if he be found again loitering, he may scourge him with whips or rods. Spenser on Ireland.
I am whipt and scourg'd with rods,
Nettled, and stung with plimires, when I hear Of Bolingbroke. Shaksp. Henry IV.
In this condition the rod of God hath a voice to be heard, and he, whose office it is, ought now to expound to the sick man the particular meaning of the voice. Hammond.
Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements; that thy rod, as well as thy staff, may comfort us. K. Charles.
They trembling learn to throw the fatal dart,
And under rods of rough centurions smart. Dryden.
As soon as that sentence is executed, these rods, these instruments of divine displeasure, are thrown into the fire. Att.
A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.
RODE. pret. of ride.
He in paternal glory rode. Milton.
RODOMONTADE. n. f. [from a boastful boisterous hero of Aniolo, called Rademonte; rodomontade, Fr.] An empty noisy bluster or boast; a rant.
He only serves to be sport for his company; for in these gamefome days men will give him hints, which may put him upon his rodomontades. Government of the Tongue.
The liberties of painting have no other model but a rodo-montade genius, and very irregular, which violently hurries them away. Dryden's Dryden.
He talks extravagantly in his passion, but if I would quote a hundred passages in Ben Jonson's Cethagus, I could shew that the rodomontades of Almanzor are neither so irrational nor impossible, for Cethagus threatens to destroy nature. Dry.
To RODOMONTADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To brag thra-sonically; to boast like Rodomonte.
ROE. n. f. [from rocca, Saxon.]
1. A species of deer.
He would him make
The roe bucks in flight to overtake. Fairy Queen.
They were as swift as roes upon the mountains. Chr.
Procure me a Troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed? Arbutnot and Pope.
2. The female of the hart.
Thy greyhounds are swifter than the roe. Shaksp.
Run like a roe or hart upon
The lofty hills of Bitheron. Sandys's Paraphrase.
ROE. n. f. [properly roan or roe; roan, Danish; roen, German.] The eggs of fish.
Here comes Romeo
Without his roe, like a dried herring. Shaksp.
ROGATION. n. f. [from roga, Fr. from roga, Lat.] Litany;
supplication.
He perfecteth the rogations or litanies before in use, and addeth unto them that which the present necessity required. Hook.
Supplications, with this solemnity for appeasing of God's wrath, were of the Greek church termed litanies, and rogations of the Latin. Taylor.
ROGATION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceeding Whitunday; thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers and processions then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of holy Thursday. Diöz.

ROI

- ROGUE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A wandering beggar; a vagrant; a vagabond.
For fear left we, like rogues, should be reputed,
And for ear-marked beasts abroad be bruited. Hubbard.
The sheriff and the marshal may do the more good, and more terrify the idle rogue. Spenser on Ireland.
The scum of people and wicked condemned men spoileth the plantation; for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy and do mischief. Bacon's Essays.
The troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
2. A knave; a dishonest fellow; a villain; a thief.
Thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain. Shaksp.
A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly as the executioner; but then there is a vast disparity, when one action is murder, and the other justice. South.
If he call rogue and rascal from the garret,
He means you no more mischief than a parrot. Dryden.
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.
3. A name of slight tenderness and endearment.
Oh, what a rogue and pleasant slave am I!
I never knew a woman love man so. Shaksp.
—Alas, poor rogue, I think indeed she loves. Shaksp.
4. A wag.
To ROGUE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To run all countries a wild roguery. Donne.
2. Knavish tricks.
They will afterwards hardly be drawn to their wonted lewd life in thievery and roguery. Spenser on Ireland.
You rogue, here's time in this sack too; there is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man. Shaksp.
Like the devil did tempt and sway'em
To rogueries, and then betray'em. Handbrass, p. i.
The kid smelt out the roguery. L'Estrange's Fables.
'Tis no scandal grown,
For debt and roguery to quit the town. Dryden.
The roguery of alchymy,
And we, the bubbled fools,
Spend all our present stock in hopes of golden rules. Swift.
3. Waggery; arch tricks.
RO'GUESHIP. n. f. [from rogue.] The qualities or personage of a rogue.
Say, in what nasty cellar under ground,
Or what church porch, your roguishness may be found? Dry.
RO'GUISH. adj. [from rogue.]
1. Vagrant; vagabond.
Though the persons, by whom it is used, be of better note than the former roguish sort; yet the fault is no less worthy of a marshal. Spenser.
2. Knavish; fraudulent.
He gets a thousand thumps and kicks,
Yet cannot leave his roguish tricks. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. Waggish; wanton; slightly mischievous.
The most bewitching leer with her eyes, the most roguish cast; her cheeks are dimpled when she smiles, and her smiles would tempt an hermit. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
I am pleas'd to see my tenants pass away a whole evening in playing their innocent tricks; our friend Wimble is as merry as any of them, and shews a thousand roguish tricks on these occasions. Addison's Spectator, N° 269.
Timothy used to be playing roguish tricks; when his mistress's back was turned, he would loll out his tongue. Arch.
RO'GUISHLV. adv. [from roguish.] Like a rogue; knavishly;
wantonly.
RO'GUISHNESS. n. f. [from roguish.] The qualities of a rogue.
RO'GUY. adj. [from rogue.] Knavish; wanton. A bad word.
A shepherd's boy had gotten a roguish trick of crying a wolf, and fooling the country with false alarms. L'Estrange.
To ROIST. v. n. [of this word the most probable etymology is from roister, Islandick, a violent man.]
To behave turbulently; to act at discretion; to be at free quarter; to bluster.
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits. Shaksp.
Among a crew of roisting fellows,
He'd fit whole evenings at the alchouse. Swift.
ROISTER, or ROISTERER. n. f. [from the verb.] A turbulent, brutal, lawless, blustering fellow.

Peacham.
9. The pin ought to be as thick as a rolling pin.
Wiseman.
10. To pour in a stream or waves.
A small Euphrates through the piece is roll'd,
And little eagles wave their wings in gold.
Pope.

To ROLL. v. n.

1. To be moved by the successive application of all parts of the surface to the ground.
Our nation is too great to be ruined by any but itself; and if the number and weight of it roll one way upon the greatest changes that can happen, yet England will be safe.
Temple.
2. Reports, like flow-balls, gather fill the farther they roll.
Government of the Tongue.

Fire must rend the sky,
And wheel on th' earth, devouring where it rolls.
Milton.
A tortoise, by pushing against the ground only with its neck and head, rocks itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit it to roll its shell.
Ray on the Creation.

2. To run on wheels.
He next essays to walk, but downward prest'd,
On four feet imitates his brother beast;
By slow degrees he gathers from the ground
His legs, and to the rolling chair is bound.

ROU

- I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antic round. Shakep. Macbeth.
Three or four we'll dress like urchins,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakep. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
What is this,
That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty? Shakep. Macbeth.
Hirsute roots are a middle fort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.
What is the fun
Be centre to the world; and other stars,
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds. Milton.
Knit your hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.
He did foretell and prophesy of him,
Who to his realms that azure round hath join'd. Denham.
They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts afar;
Then in a round the mingled bodies run,
Flying they follow, and pursuing flun. Dryden.
How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a fame so truly circular?
For, in a round, what order can be shew'd,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are?
The mouth of Vesuvio has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round. Addison.
This image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp on British coins shall live. Addison.
2. Rundle; step of a ladder.
When he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. Shakep. Julius Caesar.
Many are kick'd down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder. Government of the Tongue.
All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise;
The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies. Dryden.
This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven. Norris.
3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.
A gentle round fill'd to the brink,
To this and t'other friend I drink. Suckling.
Women to cards may be compar'd; we play
A round or two, when us'd, we throw away. Granville.
The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.
4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.
We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the starry quire,
Who, in their mighty watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years. Milton.
If nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect, but the air's round of venustous changes. L'Estrange.
How then to drag a wretched life beneath
An endless round of still returning woes,
And all the gnawing pangs of vain remorse?
What torment's this? Smith.
Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn,
Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

RYE GRASS. n. f. A kind of strong grass.
Some low ryegrass with the corn at Michaelmas. Mortimer.

S.

SAB

S. Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation.

In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z; as rose, roseate, rose, after, useful, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as lose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given.

In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this;
and sometimes z, as in at, has; and generally where s stands in verbs for th, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once ss, as oss, anciently asse; wilderness, anciently wildernesse; distress, anciently distresse.

SABAOTH. n. f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, SA'BATH. } French; sabatum, Latin.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for public worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.
Holy Lord God of sabath. Common Prayer.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shakespeare.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Ere sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releas'd,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one the now enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one, which the employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Interruption of pain or sorrow; time of rest.
Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel's C. War.
Nor can his blest soul look down from heav'n,
Or break th' eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.

Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.
SA'BATHBREAKER. n. f. [sabbath and break.] Violator of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.

The usurer is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday. Bacon's Essays.
SABBA'TICAL. adj. [sabbaticum, Lat. sabbaticus, Fr. from sab- bath.] Resembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.

The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year, a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment. Forster.

SA'BATHISM. n. f. [from sabbatum, Latin.] Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid.

SA'BINE. n. f. [sabina, Fr. sabina, Latin.] A plant.
Sabine or lavin will make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond any of the sorts of trees commonly made use of for that purpose. Mortimer.

SA'BLE. n. f. [sibella, Latin.] Fur.
Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little beast of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black.
Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentleman's arms. Peacocks on Blazoning.

Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently rought from his head his rich cap of sables. Knolles.
The peacocks plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail. Gay.

SA'BLE. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

SAC

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle 'gan to shade
The face of earth, and ways of living wight. Fairy Queen.

With him inthron'd
Sat sable vested night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They soon begin that tragick play,
And with their smoaky cannons banish day:
Night, horror, slaughter, with confusion meet,
And in their sable arms embrace the fleet. Waller.

Adorning first the genius of the place,
And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne. Dryd.
SA'BLE. n. f. [French.]

1. A sandpit.
2. [In carpentry.] A piece of timber as long, but not so thick, as a beam. Bailey.

SA'BRE. n. f. [fabre, French; I suppose, of Turkish original.]
A cynnetar; a short sword with a convex edge; a faulchion.
To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;
I ask no other blessing of my stars,
No prize but fame, no mistress but the wars. Dryden.

Scam'd o'er with wounds, which his own sabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village slave,
The foe deceiv'd. Pope's Odyssey.

SABULOUSITY. n. f. [from sabulosus.] Grittiness; sandiness.
SA'BULOUS. adj. [sabulum, Latin.] Gritty; sandy.
SACCAD'E. n. f. [French.] A violent check the rider gives his horse, by drawing both the reins very suddenly: a correction used when the horse bears heavy on the hand. Bailey.

SA'CCHARINE. adj. [saccharum, Latin.] Having the taste or any other of the chief qualities of sugar.
Manna is an essential saccharine salt, sweating from the leaves of most plants. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SACERDOTAL. adj. [sacerdotalis, Latin.] Priestly; belonging to the priesthood.
They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfi.

He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with these powers, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission. Atterbury.

SA'CHEL. n. f. [sacculus, Lat.] A small sack or bag.
SACK. n. f. [Hebrew; saxx; saxx, Latin; sax, Sax.
It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]

1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag.
Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Roan. Shak. Henry VI.

Vastus caus'd the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the fight of the fleet cast into the sea. Knolles.

2. The measure of three bushels.

Now the great work is done, the corn is ground,
The grist is sack'd, and every sack well bound. Betterton.

2. [From sacar, Spanish.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.
Edward Bruce spoiled and burnt all the old English pale inhabitants, and sack'd and rais'd all cities and corporate towns.
Spenser on Ireland.

I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. Shakep. Henry VI.
What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword?
What cities sack'd? Fairfax.

Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand
What barbarous invader sack'd the land?
The pope himself was ever after unfortunate, Rome being twice taken and sack'd in his reign. South's Sermon.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sack'd by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water.

SACK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Storm of a town; pillage; plunder.
If Saturn's son bestows

The sack of Troy, which he by promise owes,
Then shall the conqu'ring Greeks thy loss restore. Dryden.

2. A kind of sweet wine, now brought chiefly from the Canaries. [See, French, of uncertain etymology; but derived by Skinner, after Mandelso, from Xaque, a city of Morocco.]

Please you drink a cup of sack. Shakespeare.
The butler hath great advantage to allure the maids with a glass of sack.

SACKBUT. n. f. [sacbut, Spanish; sambuca, Latin; sambucus, French.] A kind of pipe.

The trumpets, sackbuts, pflauters and fife,
Make the fun dance.

SACKCLOATH. n. f. [sack and cloth.] Cloth of which sacks are made; coarse cloth sometimes worn in mortification.

A fort of coarse stuff made of goats hair, of a black or dark colour, worn by soldiers and mariners; and used as a habit among the Hebrews in times of mourning and distress.

It was called sackcloth, either because sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because haircloths were straight and close like a sack.

To augment her painful penance more,
Thrice every week in alms she did sit,
And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore. F. Queen.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe,
And dust upon my clouded forehead throw. Sandy.

Being clad in sackcloth, he was to lie on the ground, and constantly day and night to implore God's mercy for the sin he had committed. Ayliffe's Paragon.

SACKER. n. f. [from sack.] One that takes a town.

Snuff the candles at supper on the table, because the burning snuff may fall into a dish of soup or sackposset. Swift.

SACRAMENT. n. f. [sacrament, Fr. sacramentum, Latin.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to Christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament
To give their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot. Shakespeare, H. VI.

As we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakespeare, R. III.

Before the famous battle of Cressy, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his son, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

SACRAMENTAL. adj. [sacramental, Fr. sacramental, Latin.] Constituting a sacrament; pertaining to a sacrament.

To make complete the outward substance of a sacrament, there is required an outward form, which form sacramental elements receive from sacramental words. Hooker.

The words of St. Paul are plain; and whatever interpretation can be put upon them, it can only vary the way of the sacramental efficacy, but it cannot evacuate the blessing. Taylor.

SACRAMENTALLY. adv. [from sacramental.] After the manner of a sacrament.

My body is sacramentally contained in this sacrament of bread.

The law of circumcision was meant by God sacramentally to impress the duty of strict purity. Hammond.

SACRED. adj. [sacre, French; sacer, Latin.]

1. Devoted to religious uses; holy.

Gods love to haunt her sacred shades. Milton.

This temple and his holy ark,
With all his sacred things. Milton.

O'er its eastern gate was rais'd above
A temple, sacred to the queen of love. Dryden.

2. Inviolable.

The honour's sacred, which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack it. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance? how to violate
The sacred fruit? Milton.

Secrets of marriage still are sacred held;
There sweet and bitter by the wife conceal'd. Dryden.

SAC

SA'CREDLY. adv. [from sacred.] Inviolably; religiously.

When God had manifested himself in the flesh, how sacredly did he preserve this privilege? South's Sermons.

SA'CREDNES. n. f. [from sacred.] The state of being sacred; state of being consecrated to religious uses; holiness; sanctity.

In the sanctuary the cloud, and the oracular answers, were prerogatives peculiar to the sacredness of the place. South.

This insinuates the sacredness of power, let the administration of it be what it will.

SACRIFICK. adj. [sacrificus, Latin.] Employed in sacrifice.

SACRIFICABLE. adj. [from sacrificus, Lat.] Capable of being offered in sacrifice.

Although Jephtha's vow run generally for the words, whatsoever shall come forth; yet might it be restrained in the sense, for whatsoever was sacrificable, and justly subject to lawful immolation, and so would not have sacrificed either horse or dog.

SACRIFICATOR. n. f. [sacrificator, Fr. sacrificator, Latin.] Sacrificer; offerer of sacrifice.

Not only the subject of sacrifice is unquestionable, but also the sacrificator, which the picture makes to be Jephtha. Brown.

SACRIFICATORY. adj. [from sacrificus, Latin.] Offering sacrifice.

To SA'CRIFICE. v. a. [sacrificer, French; sacrifico, Latin.]

1. To offer to heaven; to immolate.

Alarbus limbs are leapt,
And intrails feed the sacrificing fire. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.

This blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries
To me for justice. Shakespeare, Richard II.

I sacrifice to the Lord all that openeth the matrix, being males.

Men from the herd or flock
Of sacrificing bullock, lamb, or kid. Milton.

2. To destroy or give up for the sake of something else.

'Tis a sad contemplation, that we should sacrifice the peace of the church to a little vain curiosity. Decay of Piety.

The breach of this rule, To do as one would be done to, would be contrary to that interest men sacrifice to when they break it. Lact.

Syphax loves you, and would sacrifice
His life, nay more, his honour, in your service. Addison.

1. The act of offering to heaven.

God will ordain religious rites
Of sacrifice. Milton.

2. The thing offered to heaven, or immolated.

Upon such sacrifice
The gods themselves throw incense. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Go with me like good angels to my end,
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice. Shakespeare.

And lift my soul to heav'n.

Moloch besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice. Milton.

My life if thou preserv'st, my life
Thy sacrifice shall be;

And death, if death must be my doom,
Shall join my soul to thee. Addison's Spectator.

3. Any thing destroyed, or quitted for the sake of something else.

4. Any thing destroyed.

SA'CRIFICER. n. f. [from sacrificus.] One who offers sacrifice; one that immolates.

Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers. Shakespeare.

When some brawny sacrificer knocks,
Before an altar led, an offer'd ox,
His eyeballs rooted out are thrown to ground. Dryden.

A priest pours wine between the horns of a bull: the priest is veiled after the manner of the old Roman sacrificer. Addison.

SACRIFICIAL. adj. [from sacrificus.] Performing sacrifice; included in sacrifice.

Rain sacrificial whiffs rings in his ear;
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare, Timon.

Tertullian's observation upon these sacrificial rites, is pertinent to this rule. Taylor's Worth Communicant.

SA'CRILEGE. n. f. [sacrilege, Fr. sacrilegium, Lat.] The crime of appropriating to himself what is devoted to religion; the crime of robbing heaven; the crime of violating or profaning things sacred.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd,
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower!
What sacrilege hath such a faint disgrac'd? Sidney.

SACRILEGIOUS. adj. [sacrilegeus, Lat. from sacrilege.] Violating things sacred; polluted with the crime of sacrilege.

To sacrilegious perjury should I be betrayed, I should account it greater misery.

By vile hands to common use debas'd,
With sacrilegious taunt, and impious jest. Prior.

Still green with bays each ancient altar stands,
Above the reach of sacrilegious hands. Pope.

Blasphemy is a sacrilegious and a sacrilegious detraction from the Godhead. Ayliffe's Paragon.

SACRILEGIOUSLY. adv. [from sacrilegeus.] With sacrilege.

When these evils befall him, his conscience tells him it was for most sacrilegiously pillaging and invading God's house.

SA'CRING. part. [This is a participle of the French sacrer. The verb is not used in English.] Consecrating.

I'll startle you,
Worse than the facing bell. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

The facing of the bells of France is the sign of their sovereignty priesthood as well as kingdom, and in the right thereof they are capable of holding all vacant benefices. Temple.

SA'CRIST. n. f. [sacristain, French.] He that has the care of the church.

A sacrist or treasurer are not dignitaries in the church of common right, but only by custom. Ayliffe's Paragon.

Bold Amycus from the robb'd vestry brings
A fconce that hung on high,
With tapers fill'd, to light the sacrists. Dryden.

A third apartment should be a kind of sacristy for altars, idols, and sacrificing instruments. Addison.

SAD. adj. [Of this word, so frequent in the language, the etymology is not known. It is probably a contraction of sadged, heavy, burthened, overwhelmed, from to sag, to load.]

1. Sorrowful; full of grief.

Do you think I shall not love a sad Pamela so well as a joyful?

I now must change
Those notes to tragedy; sad task!

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Habitually melancholy; heavy; gloomy; not gay; not cheerful.

He misfireth unto men, and other creatures, all celestial influences: it dissipateth those sad thoughts and sorrows, which the darkness both begeth and maintaineth. Raleigh.

See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propp'd on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.

3. Serious; not light; not volatile; grave.

He with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
From point to point discours'd his voyage. Spenser.

The lady Katharine, a sad and religious woman, when Henry VIII's resolution of a divorce from her was first made known, said that she had not offended; but it was a judgment of God, for that her former marriage was made in blood. Bacon.

If it were an embassy of weights, choice was made of some sad person of known judgment and experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

A sad wife valour is the brave complexion
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The gilder is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or a fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.

4. Afflictive; calamitous.

5. Bad; inconvenient; vexatious. A word of burlesque complaint.

These qualifications make him a sad husband. Addison.

6. Dark coloured.

- Beyond the beating farge his course he bore,
With longing eyes observing, to survey
Some smooth ascent, or safe sequester'd bay. Pope.
2. Free from hurt.
Put your head into the mouth of a wolf, and when you've brought it out safe and sound, talk of a reward. LEstrange.
3. Concurring security.
To write the same things to you, to me is not grievous, but to you safe. Phil. iii. 1.
- Ascend; I follow thee, safe guide, the path Thou lead'st me. Milton.
4. No longer dangerous; repositd out of the power of doing harm.

Banquo's safe.
—Ay, my good lord; safe in a ditch: he lies
With twenty trenched gashes on his head,
The least a death to nature. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Our great forbiddar safe, with all his spies
About him. Milton.

SAFE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A buttry; a pantry. Ainsw.

SAFECONDUCT. n. f. [from conduire, French.]

1. Convey; guard through an enemy's country.
A trumpet was sent to Sir William Waller, to desire a safe- conduct for a gentleman. Clarendon.

2. Pass; warrant to pass.
SAFEGUARD. n. f. [from safe and guard.]

1. Defence; protection; security.

We serve the living God as near as our wits can reach to the knowledge thereof, even according to his own will; and do therefore trust, that his mercy shall be our safeguard. Hooker.

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors. Shakefp.

The smallest worm will turn, if trod upon;
And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood. Shakefp.

Cesar, where dangers threatened on the one side, and the opinion that there should be in him little safeguard for his friends on the other, chose rather to venture upon extremities, than to be thought a weak protector. Raleigh.

Great numbers, defended from them, have, by the blees-ing of God upon their industry, raised themselves so high in the world as to become, in times of difficulty, a protection and a safeguard to that altar, at which their ancestors ministered. Atterbury's Sermons.

Thy sword, the safeguard of thy brother's throne,
Is now become the bulwark of thy own. Granville.

2. Convey; guard through any interdicted road, granted by the possession.

3. Pass; warrant to pass.

pass to two lords, to deliver a message from the king to the two houses. Clarendon.

TO SAFEGUARD. v. n. [from the noun.] To guard; to protect.

We have locks to safeguard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. Shak. Hen. V.

SAFELY. adv. [from safe.]

1. In a safe manner; without danger.
Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs, concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view? Locke.

All keep aloof, and safely shout around;
But none presume to give a nearer wound. Dryden.

2. Without hurt.
God safely quit her of her burthen, and with gentle travel, to the gladdening of your highness with an heir. Shak. H. VIII.

SAFENESS. n. f. [from safe.] Exemption from danger.

If a man should forbear his food or his business, till he had certainty of the safeness of what he was going about, he must starve and die disputing. South's Sermons.

SAFER. n. f. [from safe.]

1. Freedom from danger.
To that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shakefp. Macbeth.

If her acts have been directed well,
While with her friendly clay she deign'd to dwell,
Shall she with safety reach her pristine seat,
Find her rest endless, and her bliss complete? Prior.

2. Exemption from hurt.
But mine own safeties: you may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think. Shak. Macbeth.

3. Preservation from hurt.
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties: you may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think. Shak. Macbeth.

4. Custody; security from escape.
Imprison him;
Deliver him to safety, and return. Shak. King John.

SAFFLOW. n. f. A plant.

An herb they call safflow, or bastard saffron, dyers use for scarlet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SAFFRON. n. f. [from saffron, French, from saphar, Arabic.] It was yellow, according to Davies in his Welsh dictionary.
Crocus, Latin.]

S A G

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, which is shaped like a lily, fitfulous underneath, the tube widening into six segments, and resting on the footstalk: the point rises out of the bottom of the flower, and is divided into three-headed or crested capillaments; but the emplement afterwards turns to an oblong triangular fruit, divided into three cells, full of roundish seeds. It hath a tuberoso root, and long nervous grassy leaves, with a longitudinal furrow through the middle of each. There are Spring-flowering crocuses, and those which flower in Autumn. Their seeds are ripe about the latter end of April: the time of planting is in July. About the beginning of September they begin to spire, and sometime after appear the saffron flowers, which are gathered as well before as after they are full-blown; and the most proper time for this is early in the morning: the chives being all picked out of the flowers, the next labour about them is to dry them on the kiln: at first they give it a pretty strong heat. The charges and profits attending the culture of saffron, have been computed in the following manner: the rent of an acre of ground, and the expence of manuring it, is reckoned at twenty-three pounds: the value of twenty-six pounds of saffron, the computed produce of an acre in three years, is, at a mean, supposed to be thirty-nine pounds; and consequently the neat profits of an acre of ground, producing saffron, will in three years amount to sixteen pounds. Miller.

Grind your bole and chalk, and five or six shives of saffron. Peasam.

SAFFRON. n. f. [from saffron, Latin.] A plant.

This plant agrees with the thistle in most of its characters; but the seeds of it are always destitute of down. It is very much cultivated in Germany for the dyers use, and is brought from thence into England. As it grows it spreads into many branches, each producing a flower at the top of the shoot, which, when fully blown, is cut or pulled off, and dried, and it is the part the dyers use. Miller.

SAFFRON. adj. Yellow; having the colour of saffron.

Are these your customers?
Did this companion, with the saffron face,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut? Shakefp.

Soon as the white and red mixt finger'd dame
Had guilt the mountains with her saffron flame,
I sent my men to Circe's house. Chapman's Odyssey.

Now when the rosy morn began to rise,
And wad'd her saffron streamer through the skies. Dryden.

TO SAG. v. n. To hang heavy.

The mind I lay by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakefp.

TO SAG. v. a. To load; to burthen.

SAGACIOUS. adj. [from sagax, Latin.]

1. Quick of scent.
So scented the grim feature, and up-turn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air;
Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton's Paradise Lost.

With might and main they chas'd the murderous fox,
Nor wanted horns to inspire sagacious hounds. Dryden.

2. Quick of thought; acute in making discoveries.
Only sagacious heads light on these observations, and reduce them into general propositions. Locke.

SAGACIOUSLY. adv. [from sagacious.]

1. With quick scent.

2. With acuteness of penetration.

SAGACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sagacious.] The quality of being sagacious.

SAGACITY. n. f. [from sagacitas, French; sagacitas, Latin.]

1. Quickness of scent.

2. Acuteness of discovery.

It requires too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line nicely between virtue and vice.

Sagacity finds out the intermediate ideas, to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

Many were eminent in former ages for their discovery of it; but though the knowledge they have left be worth our study, yet they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

SAGAMORE. n. f.

1. [Among the American Indians.] A king or supreme ruler. Baile.

2. The juice of some unknown plant used in medicine.

SAGRA. n. f. [from sagra, French; sagra, Latin.] A plant of which the school of Salerno thought so highly, that they left this verse:

Cur moriatur homo cui salvia crescit in herba.

It hath a labiate flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is sometimes arched, and sometimes hooked; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts, bunching out and not hollowed at the clare: out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds, which are roundish, shut up in an husk, which before was the flower-cup: to which may be added, that the flamina do somewhat resemble the os hyoides.
Miller.

Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day the liv'd. Shakefp. Macbeth.

2. Holy; sacred.

I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
By your renouement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakefp.

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted hills. Milton.

SAINT JOHN'S WORT. n. f. A plant.

This plant hath a fibrose root: the leaves grow opposite by pairs at the joints of the stalks: the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expanded: the flower consists of five leaves expanded like a rose, having many flamina in the centre surrounding a conical ovary, which becomes a three-cornered pointed fruit, and is divided into three cells, containing many small seeds. There are thirty species of this plant, of which the four first sorts grow wild, and the rest are used in medicine. The first sort, called common Saint John's wort, is used in medicine. Miller.

My salad days,
 When I was green in judgment, cold in blood. Shaksp.
 You have, to rectify your palate,
 An olive, capers, or some better salad, Unb'ring the mutton. Ben. Johnson.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
 Fall on. Dryden's Pers. Sat.
 The happy old Coricayan's fruits and salads, on which he lived contented, were all of his own growth. Dryden.
 Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled, they become potherbs; and some of those plants which are potherbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMANDER. n. f. [salamandre, Fr. salamandra, Lat.] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Andrew Parry has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.
 The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish it. Bacon's Natural History.

According to this hypothesis the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell therein. Clavius, Sisyph.
 Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown's Vulg. Err.

SAL

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation. Addison's Guardian.
SALAMANDER'S Hair. n. f. A kind of asbestos, or mineral wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

SALAMANDRINE. adj. [from salamander.] Resembling a salamander.

Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed or singed. Speiatur.
SALARY. n. f. [salair, Fr. salarium, Latin.]
 1. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal. Arbutnot.
 2. Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.
 This is hire and salary, not revenge. Shak. Elmet.

Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand. Swift.
SALE. n. f. [sal, Dutch.]
 1. The act of selling.
 2. Vent; power of selling; market.

Nothing doth more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry commodities, knowing that they shall have ready sale for them at those towns. Speiser.
 3. A public and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.

Those that won the plate, and those thus sold, ought to be marked so as they may never return to the race, or to the sale. Temple.
 4. State of being venal; price.
 The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim Private reward; for which both God and state They'd set to sale. Milton's Agonist.
 The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale. Addison.

5. It seems in Speiser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from salieu, in which fish are caught.
 To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont;
 Who to entrap the fish in winding sale
 Was better feat? Speiser.

SALEABLE. adj. [from sale.] Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.
 I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money.
 This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade. Locke.

SALEABLENESS. n. f. [from saleable.] The state of being saleable.
SALEABLY. adv. [from saleable.] In a saleable manner.
SALEBROUS. adj. [salebrosus, Latin.] Rough; uneven; rugged.

SALESMAN. n. f. [sale and man.] One who sells cloaths ready made.
 Poets make characters, as salesmen cloaths;
 We take no measure of your fops and beaux. Swift.
SALEWORK. n. f. [sale and work.] Work for sale; work carelessly done.

I see no more in you than in the ordinary
 Of nature's salework. Shaksp. As you like it.

SA'LIMON. n. f. [salmo, Latin; salmon, French.]
 The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness. He is said to breed or cast his spawn in most rivers in the month of August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become famlets early in the Spring: having spent their appointed time, and done this natural duty in the fresh waters, they haile to the sea before Winter, both the melter and spawner. Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years: his growth is very sudden, so that after he is got into the sea he becomes from a famlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton's Angler.

They poke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

 The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. f. [sal, Gothick; sealt, Saxon; sal, Latin; sel, French.]
 1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be solubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active combustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential: fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Essential salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrid parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shaksp.
 He peridiously has given up
 For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
 To his wife and mother. Shak. Coriolanus.

Since salts differ much, some being fixt, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a sapor, good or evil. Boyle.

It began with a round crack in the skin, without other matter than a little sanies. Wise man's Surgery.

SA'NIOUS. adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I propos'd digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wise man.

SA'NITY. n. f. [from sanitas, Latin.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are? A happiness that often madness hits on, Which sanity and reason could not be So profitably delivered of. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

SANK. The preterite of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon's War with Spain.

SANS.

SAP

SANS, prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.
 Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shaksp.
 For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not. Shaksp. Othello.
SAP, n. f. [Saxon; sap, Dutch.] The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.
 Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
 Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
 Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.
 Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap continuing Winter's drizzled snow,
 And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
 Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaksp.peare.
 Wound the bark of our fruit-trees,
 Left, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself. Shaksp. R. II.
 His presence had infused
 Into the plant scintillating sap. Milton.
 The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Waller.
 Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbutnot.
TO SAP, v. n. [sapper, French; zappare, Italian.] To undermine; to subvert by digging; to mine.
 Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
 Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dryden.
TO SAP, v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.
 For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Tatler.
 In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
 If secret gold saps on from knave to knave. Pope.
SAPPHIRE, n. f. [sapphirus, Latin; so that it is improperly written sapphyre.] A precious stone of a blue colour.
 Sapphire is of a bright blue colour. Webster.
 In enroll'd tufts, flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
 Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery. Shaksp.peare.
 He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.
 That the sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to their value. Dorham.
SAPPHIRINE, adj. [sapphirinus, Latin.] Made of sapphire;
 resembling sapphire.
 She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
 Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be. Dome.
 A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the colliqueted mals, upon breaking the cru-cible, of a lovely sapphirine blue. Boyle.
SAPID, adj. [sapidus, Latin.] Tastesful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.
 Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction,
 'till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor. Arbutnot.
SAPIDITY, n. f. [from sapidus.] Tastesfulness; power of stimulating the palate.
 As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, and void of all sapidty. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.
SAPIENCE, n. f. [sapientia, Fr. sapientia, Latin.] Wisdom;
 sageness; knowledge.
 By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy;
 the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom. Grew.
 No only they that dwell in lowly dust,
 The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
 But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,
 Did'st to the top of honour earth advance:
 They now, put up with's deignful insolence,
 Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.
 King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Watten.
 Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.
Sapience and love
 Immenfe, and all his father in him throne. Milton.

SAR

O sov'reign, virtuous, precious of all trees
 In Paradise! of operation blest
 To sapience. Milton.
 Many a wretch in Bodlam,
 Though perhaps among the rout
 He wildly flings his filth about,
 Still has gratitude and sapience
 To spare the folks that give him hap-pence. Swift.

 There the sarpient king held dalliance. Milton.
SARPLESS, adj. [sarples, Dutch.]
 1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice.
 Pithless arms, like to a wither'd vine,
 That droops his sarples branches to the ground. Chab. HVI.
 The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
 Produces sarples leaves instead of fruits. Denham.
 This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sarples trunk. Swift.
 2. Dry; old; husky.
 If by this sarples, well plac'd, he would ensnare
 Some sarples ufferer that wants an heir. Dryden's Jew.
SARPLING, n. f. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.
 Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
 Is, like a blasted sarples, wither'd up. Shaksp. R. III.
 Nurie the sarples tall, and curl the grove
 With ringlets quaint. Milton.
 A sarples pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
 The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.
 What planter will attempt to yoke
 A sarples with a falling oak?
 Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vigorous hand Wielding her oaken sarples of command. King's Lear.
SAPONACEOUS, adj. [from sapo, Latin, soap.] Sopy; so-pory. Boyle.
SAPONARY, n. f. [from sapo.] Having the qualities of soap.
 By digesting a solution of salt of tartar with oil of almonds,
 I could reduce them to a soft saponary substance. Boyle.
 Any mixture of an oily substance with salt, may be called a soap; bodies of this nature are called saponaceous. Arbutnot.
SAPOR, n. f. [Latin.] Taste; power of affecting or stimulating the palate.
 There is some sapor in all aliments, as being to be disgustified and judged by the gust, which cannot be admitted air. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

 abounding in sap; succulence; juiciness.
SAPPY, adj. [from sap.]
 1. Abounding in sap; juicy; succulent.
 The sappy parts, and next resembling juice,
 Were turn'd to moisture for the body's use,
 Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment. Dryden.
 The sappy boughs
 Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
 Of future harvest. Phillips.
 The green heat the ripe, and the ripe give fire to the green; to which the bigness of their leaves, and hardness of their stalks, which continue moist and sappy long, doth much contribute. Mortimer.
 2. Young; not firm; weak.
 This young prince was brought up among nurses, 'till he arrived to the age of six years: when he had pass'd this weak and sappy age, he was committed to Dr. Cox. Hayward.

 Spanish dance.
 The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Arbutnot and Pope's Miscr. Sc. III.
SARCASM, n. f. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcasmus, Latin.] A keen reproach; a taunt; a gibe.
Sarcasms of wit are transmitted in story. Gow. of the Tempt.
 Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarcasm, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers's Sermon.
 When an angry master says to his servant it is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sarcasm, or irony. Watts.
SARCASTICALLY, adv. [from sarcastick.] Tauntingly; severely.
 He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no; thereby sarcastically reproaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. South.
SARCASTICAL, adj. [from sarcasm.] Keen; taunting; severely.
 What a fierce and sarcastick reprehension would this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ? South.
SARCENT, n. f.

SAT

SARCENT, n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be sericum sarace- nium, Latin.] Fine thin woven silk.
 Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of fley'd silk, thou green sarcent flap for a fore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse? Shaksp. Troilus and Crissida.
 If they be covered, though but with linnen or sarcent, it intercepts the effluvia. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 These are they that cannot bear the heat
 Of figur'd silks and under sarcent's sweat. Dryd. Juven.
 She darts from sarcent ambush wily lancers,
 Twiches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
 Her fan will pat the cheek; which snares disdain. Gay.

SARCOMPHAGOUS, adj. [σάρξ and φάγω.] Flesh-eating; feeding on flesh.
SARCOMPHAGY, n. f. [σάρξ and φάγω.] The practice of eating flesh.
 There was no sarcomphagy before the flood; and, without the eating of flesh, our fathers preferred themselves unto longer lives than their posterity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
SARCO-TICK, n. f. [from σάρξ; sarco-tick, Fr.] Medicines which fill up ulcers with new flesh; the same as incarnatives.
 By this means the humour was moderately repressed, and breathed forth; the ulcer also separated in the fontanel: after which the ulcer incarnated with common sarco-ticks, and the ulcerations about it were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epulotics. Wesman on Inflammations.
SARCUATION, n. f. [sarculus, Latin.] The act of weeding; plucking up weeds. Diels.
SARD, n. f.
SARDINE, n. f. A sort of precious stone.
SARDIUS, n. f.
 He that sat was to look upon, like a jasper and a sardine stone. Rev. iv. 3.
 Thou shalt set in it four rows of stones: the first row shall be a sardius. Ex. xxviii. 17.
SARDONYX, n. f. A precious stone.
 The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: 'tis of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward.
SARX, n. f. [σάρξ, Saxon.]
 1. A flank or thigh. Bailey.
 2. In Scotland it denotes a shirt.
 Flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open, and their sarx over their waistcoats. Arbutnot. Hist. of John Bull.
SARR, n. f. A British word for pavement, or stepping stones, still used in the same sense in Berkshire and Hampshire.
SARPLIER, n. f. [sarpliere, French.] A piece of canvas for wrapping up wares; a packing cloth. Bailey.
SARRASINE, n. f. [In botany.] A kind of birthwort. Bailey.
SARSA, n. f.
SARSAPARELLA, n. f. Both a tree and a plant. Ainsworth.
SARSE, n. f. A sort of fine lawn sieve. Bailey.
TO SARSE, v. a. [sasser, French.] To sift through a sieve or sieve. Bailey.
SART, n. f. [In agriculture.] A piece of woodland turned into arble. Bailey.
SASH, n. f. [Of this word the etymologists give no account: I suppose it comes from sashes, of savoir, to know, a sash worn being a mark of distinction; and a sash window being made particularly for the sake of seeing and being seen.]
 1. A belt worn by way of distinction; a silken band worn by officers in the army.
 2. A window so formed as to be let up and down by pulleys.
 She ventures now to lift the sash,
 The window is her proper sphere.
 As for the poem he writ on your sash,
 My sister transcrib'd it last night.
 She broke a pane in the sash window that looked into the yard. Swift.
SASHOON, n. f. A kind of leather stuffing put into a boot for the wearer's ease. Swift.
SASSAFRAS, n. f. A tree: one of the species of the cornelian cherry. The wood is medicinal. Ainsworth.
SAT, n. f. The picture of fit.
 The picture of fair Venus, that
 For which, men say, the goddess sat,
 Was lost, 'till Lely from your look Again that glorious image took.
 I answered not the rehearsal, because I knew the author sat to himself when he drew the picture, and was the very Bays of his own force. Dryden.
SATAN, n. f. [Satan, Latin.] The prince of hell;
 the devil; any wicked spirit.
 I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. Lu. x. 18.

They are much increased by the false suggestions of Satan.
Sanderfon's Judgment in one View.
 The despicable act
 Of Satan done in Paradise. Milton.
SATA'NICAL, adj. [from Satan.] Devilish; infernal.
SATA'NICK, n. f.
 The faint satanick host Defensive scarce. Milton.
SATCHEL, n. f. [sackel, German; sacculus, Latin.] A little bag: commonly a bag used by schoolboys to carry their books.
 The whining schoolboy with his satchel,
 And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school. Shak. As you like it.
 Schoolboys lag with satchels in their hands. Swift.
TO SAT, v. a. [satia, Latin.] To satiate; to glut; to pall;
 to feed beyond natural desires.
 Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 How will their bodies stript
 Enrich the vultures, while the vultures sate
 Their maws with full repast. Phillips.
 Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
 Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy. Prior.
SATELLITE, n. f. [satelles, Lat. satellites, Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four;
 I think, improperly. A small planet revolving round a larger.
 Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites. Locke.
 The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are wisely removed to the extreme regions of the system. Bentley.
 Ask of yonder argent fields above,
 Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.
SATELLITIOUS, adj. [from satelles, Lat.] Consisting of satellites.
 Their solidity and opacity, and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their rotations about their axis, are exactly the same. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
TO SATIATE, v. a. [satia, Latin.]
 1. To satisfy; to fill.
 Those smells are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than satiare it. Bacon.
 Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, 'till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ. Locke.
 The loosen'd winds
 Hurl'd high above the clouds; 'till all their force
 Consum'd, her rav'nous jaws th' earth satiare clos'd. Phillips.
 2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.
 They satiare and soon fill,
 Though pleasant. Milton.
 Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon satiated with it. Locke.
 He may be satiated, but not satisfy'd. Norris.
 3. To gratify desire.
 I may yet sur vive the malice of my enemies, although they should be satiated with my blood. King Charles.
 4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.
 Why does not salt of tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water? Newton.
SATIATE, adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety.
 When it has satiated, it seems a participle; whereas, as an adjective.
 Our generals, retir'd to their estates,
 In life's cool evenings, satiated of applause,
 Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause. Pope.
 Now may'st and thievest all hush'd and satiated lay,
 Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope's Dunci.
SATIETY, n. f. [satietas, Latin; satiété, Fr.] Fulness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty; state of being pall'd or glutted.
 He leaves a shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,
 And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shaksp.peare.
 Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waiting time and suspect of satiety. Wotton.
 In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth. Hakewill.
 They satiare and soon fill,
 Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satiety. Milton.
 No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loading or satiety. South.
 The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
 Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
 And but more relish'd as the more distress'd. Pope.
SATIN, n. f. [satén, French; drappé di satan, Italian; satén, Dutch.] A soft close and shining silk.

SAT

- Such a glittering show it bare, and so bravely it was held up from the head: upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour fat, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed. Sidney
- The ladies dress'd in rich fymars were seen,
Of Florence fat, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden
- Her petticoat, transform'd apace, Became black fat flounce'd with lace. Swift
- Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue fat. Arbutn. and Pope
- SATIRE. n. f. [satira, anciently fatira, Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; fatire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper fatire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded.
- He dares to sing thy praises in a clime
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is fatyr on the most of human kind. Dryden
- SATIRICAL. adj. [satiricus, Latin; satirique, French; from SATIRACK.] [fatire].
1. Belonging to fatire; employed in writing of invective. You must not think, that a satyrick style Allows of scandalous and brutal words. Roscommon
What human kind desires, and what they shun, Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill. Dryden's Juvenal
 2. Censorious; severe in language. Slanders, sir; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled. Shak. Hamlet
He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory. Bacon
On me when dunces are satirick,
I take it for a panegyrick. Swift
- SATIRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify. He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns. Dryden
- SATIRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires. Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest satyr of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Granville
- All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satyrists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau. Letter to the Publisher of the Dunciad
- Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay;
Blest satyr! who touch'd the mean to true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope
- SATIRIZE. v. a. [satirizar, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire. Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness. Dryden
- Should a writer single out and point his raillery at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers; but must be a very ill man if he could please himself. Addison
- I insist that my lion's mouth be not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to revile the human species, and satirize his betters. Addison's Spectator
- It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished virtues, as to praise well a man of distinguished vices. Swift
- SATISFACTION. n. f. [satisfactio, Latin; satisfaction, French.]
1. The act of pleasing to the full. The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them. Locke
 2. The state of being pleased. 'Tis a wretched satisfaction a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company. L'Estr.
There are very few discourses so short, clear, and confident, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt. Locke
 3. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness. Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied? Shakespeare —What satisfaction can you have?
Gratification; that which pleases.
Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfac- tion. South
- Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have cheated into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden's Juvenal
5. Amends; atonement for a crime; recompense for an injury. Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death. Mit. Par. Lof.

SAT

- SATISFACTIVE. adj. [satisfactus, Lat.] Giving satisfaction. By a final and satisfactive discernment of faith, we lay the last effects upon the first cause of all things. Brown's Vulg. Err.
- SATISFACTORILY. adj. [from satisfactory.] To satisfaction. Bellonius hath been more satisfactorily experimental, not only affirming that chameleons feed on flies, but upon experimentation he found these animals in their bellies. Brown's V. Er.
- They strain their memory to answer him satisfactorily unto all his demands. Dryden
- SATISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from satisfactory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content. The incompleteness of the seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but his want of an intire possession of them. Boyle
- SATISFACTORY. adj. [satisfactoire, Fr. satisfactus, Latin.]
1. Giving satisfaction; giving content. An intelligent American would scarce take it for a satisfactory account, if, desiring to learn our architecture, he should be told that a pillar was a thing supported by a basis. Locke
 2. Atoning; making amends. A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate son of God, Jesus Christ. Sanderfon
- TO SATISFY. v. a. [satisfais, Fr. satisfacio, Latin.]
1. To content; to please to such a degree as that nothing more is desired. A good man shall be satisfied from himself. Prov. xiv. 14
Will he satisfy his rigour, Satisfy'd never? Milton
 2. To feed to the fill. Who hath caused it to rain on the earth, to satisfy the desolate and waste ground, and to cause the bud of the tender tree to spring forth?
I will pursue and divide the spoil: my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Job xxxviii. 27
The righteous catch to the satisfying of his soul. Prov. xiii.
 3. To recompense; to pay to content. He is well paid that is well satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid. Shakespeare
 4. To free from doubt, perplexity, or suspense. Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardo de Vinci. Dryden
When come to the utmost extremity of body, what can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke
 5. To convince. This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke
He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause. Dryden
- The standing evidences of the truth of the Gospel, are in themselves most firm, solid, and satisfying. Atterbury
- TO SATISFY. v. n. To make payment. By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for them: thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke
- SATURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing 'till it will receive no more. Be the figures of the salts never so various, yet if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always so conform to those figures as to fill up all vacuities; and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Grew's Gosp. Sac.
- SATURANT. adj. [from saturans, Lat.] Impregnating to the fill.
- TO SATURATE. v. a. [saturare, Latin.] To impregnate 'till no more can be received or imbibed. Rain-water is plentifully saturated with terrestrial matter, and more or less stored with it. Woodward
- His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last so many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Chyren
- Still night succeeds
A soften'd shade, and saturated earth
Awaits the morning beam. Thomson
- SATURDAY. n. f. [sæterdygæ, or sæterdygæ, Saxon, according to Verfagen, from sæter, a Saxon idol; more probably from Saturus, die Saturni.] The last day of the week. This matter I handled fully in last Saturday's Spectator. Add.
- SATURDAY. n. f. [saturitas, from saturus, Latin.] Fulness; the state of being saturated; repletion.
- SATURN. n. f. [saturnus, French; saturnus, Latin.]
1. The remotest planet of the solar system: supposed by astrologers to impress melancholy, dulness, or severity of temper. The smallest planets are placed nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturnus, that are vastly greater, are wisely removed to the extreme regions. Bentley
From the far bounds
Of utmost Saturnus, wheeling wide his round. Thomson
 2. [In

SAU

2. [In chimestry.] Lead.
- SATURNINE. adj. [saturninus, Lat. saturnien, Fr. from Saturnus.] Notlight; not volatile; gloomy; grave; melancholy; severe of temper: supposed to be born under the dominion of Saturn. I may cast my readers under two divisions, the mercurial and saturnine: the first are the gay part, the others are of a more sober and solemn turn. Addison
- SATURNIAN. adj. [saturnus, Latin.] Happy; golden: used by poets for times of felicity, such as are feigned to have been in the reign of Saturn.
- Th' Augustus, born to bring Saturnian times. Pope
- SATYR. n. f. [satyrus, Latin.] A sylvan god: supposed among the ancients to be rude and lecherous. Satyr, as Pliny testifies, were found in times past in the eastern mountains of India. Peacham on Drawing
- SATYRIASIS. n. f. [from satyr.] If the chyle be very plentiful it breeds a satyr, or an abundance of seminal lymphas. Flyer on the Humours
- SAVAGE. adj. [savage, French; savaggio, Italian.]
1. Wild; uncultivated. These godlike virtues wherefore do't thou hide, Affecting private life, or more obscure
In savage wilderness? Milton
Cornels, and savage berries of the wood,
And roots and herbs, have been my meagre food. Dryden
 2. Untamed; cruel. Chain me to some steep mountain's top, Where roaring bears and savage lions roam. Shakespeare
Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,
And foes to virtue wonder'd how they wept. Pope
 3. Uncivilized; barbarous; untaught. Hence with your little ones:
To fight you thus, methinks, I am too savage;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty. Shak. Macbeth
Thus people lived altogether a savage life, 'till Saturn, arriving on those coasts, devised laws to govern them by. Raleigh
The savage clamour drown'd
Both harp and voice. Milton
A herd of wild beasts on the mountains, or a savage drove of men in caves, might be so disordered; but never a peculiar people. Spratt's Sermons
- SAVAGE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A man untaught and uncivilized; a barbarian. Long after these times were they but savages. Raleigh
The seditious lived by rapine and ruin of all the country, omitting nothing of that which savages, enraged in the height of their unruly behaviour, do commit. Hayward
- To deprive us of metals is to make us mere savages; to change our corn for the old Arcadian diet, our houses and cities for dens and caves, and our clothing for skins of beasts: 'tis to bereave us of all arts and sciences, nay, of revealed religion. Bentley
- TO SAVAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To make barbarous, wild, or cruel. A word not well authorized. Friends, relations, love himself, Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson
- SAVAGELY. adv. [from savage.] Barbarously; cruelly. Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes Savagely slaughter'd. Shakespeare Macbeth
- SAVAGENESS. n. f. [from savage.] Barbarousness; cruelty; wildness. A savageness in unreclaimed blood Of general assault. Shakespeare Hamlet
Wolves and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shakespeare Winter's Tale
The Cyclops were a people of Sicily, remarkable for savageness and cruelty. Brome's Notes on the Odyssey
- SAVAGERY. n. f. [from savage.]
1. Cruelty; barbarity. This is the bloodiest frame,
The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-eyed wrath, or flaming rage,
Presented to the tears of soft remorse. Shak. King John
 2. Wild growth. Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts,
That should deracinate such savagery. Shakespeare H. V.
- SAVANNA. n. f. [Spanish, according to Bailey.] An open meadow without wood; pasture ground in America. He that rides post through a country may tell how, in general, the parts lie; here a morass, and there a river; woodland in one part, and savanna in another. Locke
- Plains immense
And vast savanna's, where the wand'ring eye, Unfix'd, is in a verdant ocean lost. Thomson's Summer
- SAUCE. n. f. [sauce, sauce, French; salsa, Italian.] Something eaten with food to improve its taste. The bitter sauce of the sport was, that we had our honours for ever lost, partly by our own faults, but principally by his faulty using of our faults. Sidney

SAU

- To feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakespeare Macbeth
- Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shakespeare
Such was the sauce of Moab's noble feast,
'Till night far spent invites them to their rest. Cowley
He that spends his time in sports, is like him whose meat is nothing but sauce; they are healthless, chargeable, and useless. Taylor
High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker
2. To serve one the same SAUCE. A vulgar phrase to retaliate one injury with another.
- TO SAUCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To accompany meat with something of higher relish. To gratify with rich tastes. Obsolete
Earth yield me roots;
Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison. Shakespeare
 2. To intermix or accompany with any thing good, or, ironically, with any thing bad. Then tell the sauce her desires with threatnings, so that we were in a great perplexity, restrained to so unworthy a bondage, and yet restrained by love, which I cannot tell how, in noble minds, by a certain duty, claims an answering. Sidney
All the delights of love, wherein wanton youth walloweth, be but folly mixed with bitterness, and sorrow sauced with repentance. Spenser
Thou say'st his meat was sauced with thy upbraidings;
Unquiet meals make ill digestions. Shakespeare
- SAUCEBOX. n. f. [from sauce, or rather from saucey.] An impertinent or petulant fellow. The foolish old poet says, that the souls of some women are made of sea-water: this has encouraged my saucebox to be witty upon me. Addison's Spectator
- SAUCEPAN. n. f. [sauce and pan.] A small skillet with a long handle, in which sauce or small things are boiled. Your master will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift
- SAUCEY. n. f. [saucey, Fr. from sauce.]
1. A small pan or platter in which sauce is set on the table. Infuse a pugil of new violets seven times, and it shall make the vinegar so fresh of the flower, as, if brought in a saucey, you shall smell it before it come at you. Bacon
Some have mistaken blocks and posts
For spectres, apparitions, ghosts,
With saucey eyes and horns. Hudibras
 2. A piece or platter of china, into which a tea-cup is set. SAUCEY. adv. [from saucey.] Impudently; impertinently; petulantly; in a saucey manner. Though this knave came somewhat saucey into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair. Shakespeare
A freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very saucey, had almost all the words; and amongst other things, he asked in scorn one of the examiners, who was likewise a freed servant of Scribonianus, I pray, sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done? He answered, I would have stood behind his chair, and held my peace. Bacon
A trumpet behaved himself very saucey. Addison
- SAUCINESS. n. f. [from saucey.] Impudence; petulance; impertinence; contempt of superiors. With how sweet laws the blam'd their sauces,
To feel the panting heart, which through her side
Did beat their hands. Sidney
By his authority he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his sauces. Shakespeare All's well that ends well Being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauces. Shakespeare Titus Andronicus
It is sauces in a creature, in this case, to reply. Brown
Imputing it to the natural sauces of a pedant, they made him eat his words. L'Estrange
You sauces, mind your pruning-knife, or I may use it for you. Dryden's Don Sebastian

This might make all other servants challenge the same liberty, and grow pert upon their masters; and when this sauces became universal, what less mischief could be expected than an old Scythian rebellion? Collier on Pride

SAUCISSE. n. f. [French.] In gunnery, a long train of powder sewed up in a roll of pitched cloth, about two inches diameter, in order to fire a bombshell. Bailey

SAUCISSON. n. f. [French.] In military architecture, faggots or fascines made of large boughs of trees bound together. They are commonly used to cover men, to make epaulments, traverses, or breastworks in ditches full of water, to render the way firm for carriages. Bailey

SAUCY. adj. [I know not how this word can be easily deduced from sauce: it may come more properly from salsus, Latin.] Pert; petulant; contemptuous of superiors; insolent; impudent; impertinent. You are more saucey with lords than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission. Shakespeare Study

SAV

- Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with faucy looks;
Small have continual plodders ever won,
Save safe authority from others' books. Shakespeare.
And if thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours against these faucy walls. Shakespeare. K. John.
Power's first pedigree from force derives,
And calls to mind the old prerogatives
Of free-born man; and with a faucy eye
Searches the heart and soul of majesty. Denham's Sophy.
I lose my patience, when with faucy pride
By unwar'd ears I hear his numbers try'd. Recommon.
No faucy citizen shall dare
To strike a soldier, nor, when struck, resent
The wrong. Dryden's Juvenal.
Homer, to express a man both timorous and faucy, makes use of a kind of point, namely, that he had the eyes of a dog, but the heart of a deer. Addison's Spectator.
To SAVE. v. a. [saucer, French; salvo, Latin.]
1. To preserve from danger or destruction.
Let me die ere men can say God save the queen. Shakespeare.
One shall cry, yet cannot he answer, nor save him out of his trouble. Jf. xlv. 7.
A wondrous ark,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.
We may be confident whatever he does is intended for our good, and whatever we interpret otherwise we can get nothing by repining, nor save anything by resisting. Temple.
The circling streams, once thought but pools of blood,
From dark oblivion Harvey's name shall save. Dryden.
2. To preserve finally from eternal death.
Whatever we read in Scripture concerning the endless love and saving mercy which God sheweth towards his church, the only proper subject thereof is this church. Hooker.
There are some that will be saved, and some that will be damned. Shakespeare.
We are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe, to the saving of the soul. Heb. x. 39.
His merits save them. Milton.
He who seareth God, and worketh righteousness, and per-severes in the faith and duties of our religion, shall certainly be saved. Rogers.
3. Not to spend; to hinder from being spent.
With your cost you terminate the cause,
And save the expense of long litigious laws,
Where suits are traverst, and so little won,
That he who conquers is but last undone. Dryden.
4. To reserve or lay by.
He shall not feel quickness, he shall not save of that which he desired. Job xx. 20.
5. To spare; to excuse.
Will you not speak to save a lady's blush? Dryden.
Our author saves me the comparison with tragedy. Dryd.
These finews are not so much unstrung,
To fail me when my master should be serv'd;
And when they are, then will I steal to death, Silent and unobserv'd, to save his tears. Dryd. Don Sebastian.
6. To save; to reconcile.
How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentric. Milton's Parad. Lost.
7. To take or embrace opportunely, so as not to lose.
The same persons, who were chief confidants to Cromwell, foreseeing a restoration, seized the castles in Ireland, just saving the tide, and putting in a flock of merit sufficient. Swift.
To SAVE. v. n. To be cheap.
Brass ordnance saveth in the quantity of the material, and in the charge of mounting and carriage. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
SAVE. adv. [This word, adverbially used, is, like except, originally the imperative of the verb.] Except; not including.
But being all defeated, save a few,
Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she flew. Fa. Qu.
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar. Shakespeare.
He never put down a near servant, save only Stanley, the lord chamberlain. Bacon's Henry VII.
How have I then with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I made? Milton.
SA'VEALL. n. f. [save and all.] A small pan inserted into a candlestick to save the ends of candles.
SA'VEY. n. f. [from save.]
1. Preserver; rescuer.
They were manifestly acknowledged the savers of that country. Stidley.
2. One who escapes loss, though without gain.
Laws of arms permit each injur'd man
To make himself a saver where he can.
Who dares affirm this is no pious age,
When charity begins to tread the stage?

SAV

- When actors, who at best are hardly savers,
Will give a night of benefit to weavers? Swift.
3. A good husband.
4. One who lays up and grows rich.
By nature far from profusion, and yet a greater sparer than a saver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his garbisons and his castings soaked his exchequer. Watson.
SA'VIN. n. f. [fabina, Latin; saivin, fabin, Fr.] A tree.
It hath compact, rigid, and prickly ever-green leaves: the fruit is small, spherical, and warted; and the whole plant has a very rank strong smell. The species are three, and commonly cultivated for medicinal use. Miller.
SA'VING. adj. [from save.]
1. Frugal; parsimonious; not lavish.
She loved money; for she was saving, and applied her fortune to pay John's clamorous debts. Arbutin. Hist. of J. Bull.
Be saving of your candle. Swift.
2. Not turning to loss, though not gainful.
Silvio, finding his application unsuccessful, was resolved to make a saving bargain; and since he could not get the widow's estate, to recover what he had laid out of his own. Addison.
SA'VING. adv. [This is nothing more than a participle of the verb save adverbially used.] With exception in favour of.
All this world's glory seemeth vain,
And all their shows but shadows, saving she. Spenser.
Such laws cannot be abrogated, saving only by whom they were made; because the intent of them being known unto none but the author, he alone can judge how long it is requisite they should endure. Hooker.
Saving the reverence due to so great a man, I doubt not but they did all creep out of their holes. Ray on the Creation.
SA'VING. n. f. [from save.]
1. Escape of expense; somewhat preserved from being spent.
It is a great saving in all such lights, if they can be made as fair and right as others, and yet last longer. Bacon.
By reducing interest to four per cent. there was a considerable saving to the nation; but this year they give six. Addison.
2. Exception in favour.
Content not with those that are too strong for us, but still with a saving to honesty; for integrity must be supported against all violence. L'Estrange.
SA'VINGLY. adv. [from saving.] With parcimony.
SA'VINGNESS. n. f. [from saving.]
1. Parcimony; frugality.
2. Tendency to promote eternal salvation.
SA'VIOUR. n. f. [saviour, Latin.] Redeemer; he that has saved mankind from eternal death.
So judg'd he man, both judge and Saviour sent. Milton.
However consonant to reason his precepts appeared, nothing could have tempted men to acknowledge him as their God and Saviour, but their being firmly persuaded of the miracles he wrought. Addison.
To SA'UNTER. v. n. [to saunter, French; saunter, Latin.] To idle people who roved about the country, and asked charity under pretence of going to la sainte terre, to the holy land; or saunter, as having no settled home.] To wander about idly; to loiter; to linger.
The cormorant is still sauntering by the sea-side, to see if he can find any of his brais cast up. L'Estrange.
Tell me, why saunter thus from place to place
I meet thee? Dryden's Juvenal.
Though putting the mind upon an unusual stress that may discourage, ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it into a lazy sauntering about ordinary things. L'Estrange.
Yourself look after him, to cure his sauntering at his business. L'Estrange.
If men were weaned from their sauntering humour, wherein they let a good part of their lives run uselessly away, they would acquire skill in hundreds of things. L'Estrange.
So the young squire, when first he comes From country school to Will's or Tom's,
Without one notion of his own,
He saunters wildly up and down. Prior.
The brainless stripling
Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek;
A saunter tribe! such born to wide estates,
With yea and no in senates hold debates. Tickell.
Here saunter 'prentices o'er Otway weep.
Led by my hand, he saunter'd Europe round,
And gather'd ev'ry vice. Dunciad.
SA'VORY. n. f. [savore, French; satureia, Latin.] A plant.
It is of the verticillate kind, with a labiate flower, whose upper lip or crest is divided into two parts; but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts, the middle part being crenated: these flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves in a loose order, and not in whorles or spikes, as are most of this tribe of plants. Miller.
SA'VOIR. n. f. [savoir, French.]
1. A scent; odour.
What savour is better, if phsyck be true,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue? Tusser.
Benzo calls its smell a tartarous and hellish savour. Alvot.
Turn

SAW

- Turn then my freest reputation to
A savour that may strike the dullest nostril? Shakespeare.
I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things. Shakespeare.
That Jews stink naturally, that is, that there is in their race an evil savour, is a received opinion we know not how to admit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Truffles, which have an excellent oil, and a volatile salt of a grateful savour, are heating. Arbutin on Diet.
2. Taste; power of affecting the palate.
I taste
The savour of death from all things. Milton.
A direct influence from the sun gives fruit a better savour and a greater worth. South.
To SA'VOUR. v. n. [savourer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To have any particular smell or taste.
2. To betoken; to have an appearance or taste of something.
This ripping of ancestors is very pleasing, and *savour*eth of good conceit and some reading. Spenser on Ireland.
The duke's answers to his speeches are very diligently and civilly couched; and though his heart was big, yet they all savour of an humble spirit. Watson.
If 'twere a secret that concern'd my life,
This boldness might become thee;
But such unnecessary rudeness savours
Of some design. Denham's Sophy.
I have rejected every thing that savours of party. Addison.
To SA'VOUR. v. a.
1. To like.
Wildom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths savour but themselves. Shakespeare.
2. To exhibit taste of.
Thou *savour*est not the things that be of God. Gospel.
That savours only of rancour and pride. Milton.
SA'VOURILY. adv. [from savour.]
1. With gust; with appetite.
The collation he fell to very savourily. L'Estrange's Fables.
This must be some English renegade, he talks so savourily of roasting. Dryd. Don Sebastian.
2. With a pleasing relish.
There's a dearth of wit in this dull town,
When filly plays so savourily go down. Dryden.
SA'VOURINESS. n. f. [from savoury.]
1. Taste pleasing and piquant.
2. Pleasing smell.
SA'VOURY. adj. [savoureux, Fr. from savour.]
1. Pleasing to the smell.
The pleasant savoury smell
So quicken'd appetite, that I Could not but taste! Milton's Paradise Lost.
From the boughs a savoury odour blown,
Grateful to appetite I more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the reats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.
2. Piquant to the taste.
Savoury meat, such as my father loveth. Geni.
The savoury pulp they chew. Milton.
SAVOY. n. f. [brassica sabaudica, Latin.] A sort of colwort.
SA'USAGE. n. f. [sauces, French; salsum, Latin.] A roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal, and sometimes of beef, minced very small, with salt and spice; sometimes it is stuffed into the guts of fowls, and sometimes only rolled in flower.
SAW. The preterite of see.
I never saw 'till now Sight more detestable. Milton.
SAW. n. f. [saw, Danish; raga, or ryge, Saxon; scie, Fr.]
1. A dentated instrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.
The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or straight between the handle and end; because the saw is designed to act only in its progress forwards, a man having in that more strength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back, he bears it lightly off the unfaun stuff, which enables him the longer to continue his several progressions of the saw. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The roach is a leather-mouth'd fish, and has saw like teeth in his throat. Walton's Angler.
Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryd.
If they cannot cut,
His saws are toothless, and his hatchets lead. Pope.
2. [Saxa, Sax. saghe, Dut.] A saying; a sentence; a proverb.
Good kings, that must approve the common saw:
Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun! Shakespeare's King Lear.
From the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all saws of books. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;
His study in his tilt-yard. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Strict age and four severity,
With their grave saws in slumber lie. Milton.
To SAW. part. sawed and sawn. [scier, French; from the noun.]
To cut timber or other matter with a saw.
They were felled, they were sawn asunder. Heb. xi. 37.

SAY

- A carpenter, after he hath sawn down a tree, and wrought
it handomely, sets it in a wall. Wisd. xlii. 11.
It is an incalcency, from a swift motion, such as that of running, threshing, or sawing. Ray on the Creation.
If I cut my finger, I shall as certainly feel pain as if my soul was co-extended with the limb, and had a piece of it sawn through. Calver.
Master-workmen, when they direct any of their underlings to saw a piece of stuff, have several phrases for the sawing of it: they seldom say, saw the piece of stuff; but, draw the saw through it; give the piece of stuff a kerf. Moxon.
It is the carpenters work to hew the timber, saw it out, and frame it. Mortimer.
SA'WDUST. n. f. [saw and dust.] Dust made by the attrition of the saw.
If the membrane be fouled by the sawdust of the bone, wipe it off with a sponge. Wise man's Surgery.
Rotten sawdust, mixed with earth, enriches it very much.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
SA'WFISH. n. f. [saw and fish.] A sort of fish. Ar-fish.
SA'WPIE. n. f. [saw and pie.] Pie over which timber is laid to be sawn by two men.
Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once
With some diffused song. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
They colour it by laying it in a sawpit that hath oak saw- dust therein. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SAW-WORT. n. f. [serratula, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a stoculous flower, consisting of several florets divided into many parts, resting on the embryo, and contained in a scaly empalement, like the greater centaury, from which this differs in having smaller heads, and from the knapweed in having the borders of the leaves cut into small sharp segments, resembling the teeth of a saw. Miller.
SAW-WREST. n. f. [saw and wrest.] A sort of tool.
With the saw-wrest they set the teeth of the saw; that is, they put one of the notches of the wrest between the first two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the notch towards the end of the saw; and that at once turns the first tooth somewhat towards you, and the second tooth from you. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
SA'WER. n. f. [sawer, French; from saw.] One whose trade SA'WYER. } is to saw timber into boards or beams.
The pit-saw is used by joiners, when what they have to do may be as soon done at home as send it to the sawyers. Moxon.
SA'XIFRAGE. n. f. [saxifraga, Fr. saxifraga, Lat.] A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves placed orbicularly, which expand in form of a rose, out of whose multifid flower-cup rises the pointal, which commonly ends in two horns, and afterward turns, together with the flower-cup, into a roundish fruit, which has likewise two horns and two cells, which are full of small seeds. Miller.
Saxifrage, quasi saxum frangere, to break the stone, is applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term most commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtues to this effect. Quincy.
SA'XIFRAGE Meadow. n. f. [silamum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a rose and unbellated flower, consisting of several leaves placed circularly, and resting upon the empalement, which afterward becomes a fruit composed of two short channelled seeds.
SA'XIFRAGOUS. adj. [saxum and frago, Latin.] Dissolvent of the stone.
Because goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the stone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and so it came to be ordered that the goats should be fed on saxi- fragous herbs, and such as are conceived of power to break the stone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To SAY. v. a. preter. said. [recgan, Saxon; seggen, Dutch.]
1. To speak; to utter in words; to tell.
Say it out, Diggon, for whatever it might;
For nought but well mought him beight,
He is so meek. Spenser.
In this slumbrv agitation what have you heard her say? Shak.
Speak unto Solomon; for he will not say thee nay. 1 Kings.
2. To allege.
After all can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of. Tillett.
In vain shall we attempt to justify ourselves, as the rich young man in the gospel did, by appealing to the great duties of the law; unless we can say somewhat more, even that we have been liberal in our distributions to the poor. Atterbury.
3. To tell in any manner.
With flying speed, and seeming great pretence, Came messenger with letters which his message said. F. Qu.
To SAY. v. n.
1. To speak; to pronounce; to utter.
He said moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee; and the said, say on. 1 Kings ii. 14.
Say nothing to any man, but go thy way. Mar. i. 44.
To the others he said, go ye after him. Exek. ix. 5.
The council-table and star-chamber hold, as Thucydides said of the Athenians, for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.
23 E The

The lion here has taken his right measures, that is to say, he has made a true judgment. L'Estrange.
 He has left his succession as undetermined as if he had said nothing about it. Locke.
 This ought to weigh with those whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge, and I have nothing to say to it. Locke.
 Of some propositions it may be difficult to say whether they affirm or deny; as when we say, Plato was no fool. Watts.
 2. In poetry, say is often used before a question; tell. Watts.
 Say first what cause
 Mov'd our grand parents to fall off? Milton.
 Say, Stella, feel you no content,
 Reflecting on a life well-spent. Swift.
 S.A.V. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A speech; what one has to say.
 He no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning snap. L'Estrange.
 2. [For assay.] Sample.
 Since thy outside looks to fair and warlike,
 And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes,
 By rule of knighthood I disdain. Shakespeare.
 So good a say invites the eye,
 A little downward to espy
 The lively clusters of her breasts. Sidney.
 3. Trial by a sample.
 This gentleman having brought that earth to the publick say matters, and upon their being unable to bring it to fusion, or make it fly away, he had procured a little of it, and with a peculiar flux separated a third part of pure gold. Boyle.
 4. [Sais, French.] Silk. Obsolete.
 5. A kind of woollen stuff.
 S.A.VISC. n. f. [from say.] Expression; words; opinion sent tentiously delivered.
 I thank thee, Brutus,
 That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true. Shakespeare.
 Moses fled at this saying, and was a stranger in Median. Acts.
 Many are the sayings of the wife,
 Extolling patience as the truest fortitude. Milton.
 Others try to divert the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, that if evils are long, they are but light. Tillotson's Sermons.
 We poetick folks, who must restrain
 Our measur'd sayings in an equal chain,
 Have troubles utterly unknown to those,
 Who let their fancy loose in rambling prose. Prior.
 The sacred function can never be hurt by their sayings, if not first reproached by our doings. Atterbury.
 SCAB. n. f. [scab, Saxon; scabbia, Italian; scabbe, Dutch; scabies, Latin.]
 1. An incrustation formed over a sore by dried matter.
 What's the matter, you diligent rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make yourselves scabs? Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
 That free from gouts thou may'st preserve thy care,
 And clear from scabs, produc'd by freezing air. Dryden.
 2. The itch or mange of horses.
 3. A paltry fellow, so named from the itch often incident to negligent poverty.
 I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsome'st scab in Greece. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.
 Well said, wart, thou art a good scab: there is a tetter for thee. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
 One of the usurers, a head man of the city, took it in dudgeon to be ranked, cheek by jowl, with a scab of a currier. L'Estrange.
 This vap'ring scab must needs devise
 To ape the thunder of the skies. Swift.
 SCABBARD. n. f. [schap, German. Junius.] The sheath of a sword.
 Enter fortune's gate,
 Nor in thy scabbard sheath that famous blade,
 'Till settled be thy kingdom and estate. Fairfax.
 What eyes! how keen their glances! you do well to keep 'em veil'd: they are too sharp to be trusted out o' th' scabbard. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
 SCABBED. adj. [from scab.]
 1. Covered or diseased with scabs.
 The briar fruit makes those that eat them scabb'd. Bacon.
 2. Paltry; forry.
 To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryden.
 SCABBEDNESS. n. f. [from scabb'd.] The state of being scabb'd.
 SCABBINESS. n. f. [from scabby.] The quality of being scabby.
 SCABBY. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.
 Her writhled skin, as rough as mapple rind,
 So scabby was, that would have loath'd all womankind. F. R.
 A scabby tetter on their peltis will stick,
 When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

If the grazier should bring me one wether, fat and well reeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me security to restore my money for those that were lean, thorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customer. Swift.
 SCABIOUS. adj. [scabius, Latin.] Itchy; leprous.
 In the Spring scabious eruptions upon the skin were epidemical, from the acidity of the blood. Arbutnot on Air.
 SCABIOUS. n. f. [scabius, Fr. scabiosa, Latin.] A plant.
 It hath a flocculent flower, consisting of many unequal florets, contained in a common empalement: some of these, which occupy the middle, are cut into four or five segments; the rest, which are placed at the edge, are bilabiate: each of these fits on the top of the embryo, which is crowned, and is contained in a proper empalement, which afterward becomes a capsule, either simple or funnel-shaped, pregnant with a seed crowned, which before was the embryo. Müller.
 SCABROUS. adj. [scabrus, Fr. scaber, Latin.]
 1. Rough; rugged; pointed on the surface.
 Urine, black and bloody, is occasioned by something sharp or scabrous wounding the small blood-vessels: if the stone is smooth and well bedded, this may not happen. Arbutnot.
 2. Harsh; unmusical.
 Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these: he seeks them, as some do Chaucerisms with us, which were better expunged. Ben. Johnson's Discourse.
 SCABROUSNESS. n. f. [from scabrous.] Roughness; ruggedness.
 SCABWORT. n. f. A plant. Ansforth.
 SCAD. n. f. A kind of fish. Probably the same with scad.
 Of round fish there are sprat, barn, smelt, and scad. Carew.
 SCAFFOLD. n. f. [schafau, French; schavut, Dutch, from schaven, to shew.]
 1. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators.
 Pardon
 The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd
 On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
 So great an object. Shakespeare. Henry V.
 The throng
 On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand. Milton.
 2. The gallery raised for execution of great malefactors.
 Fortune smiling at her fortune therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney.
 3. Frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.
 These outward beauties are but the props and scaffolds
 On which we built our love, which now made perfect, Stands without those supports. Denham's Sophy.
 Sylla added three hundred commons to the senate; then abolished the office of tribune, as being only a scaffold to tyranny, whereof he had no further use. Swift.
 To SCAFFOLD. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with frames of timber.
 SCAFFOLDAGE. n. f. [from scaffold.] Gallery; hollow floor.
 A fluttering player doth think it rich
 To hear the wooden dialogue and sound,
 'Twill his fireth'd footing and the scaffoldage. Shakespeare.
 SCAFFOLDING. n. f. [from scaffold.]
 1. Temporary frames or stages.
 What are riches, empire, power,
 But steps by which we climb to rise and reach
 Our wish; and, that obtain'd, down with the scaffolding
 Of sceptres and of thrones.
 Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure. Pope.
 2. Building slightly erected.
 Send forth your lab'ring thought;
 Let it return with empty notions fraught,
 Of airy columns every moment broke,
 Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke:
 Yet this solution but once more affords
 New change of terms and scaffolding of words. Prior.
 SCAL'D. n. f. [French; scalada, Spanish, from cala, Latin, SCALADO.] A ladder.] A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.
 What can be more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalado, battered and assaulted another, and overthrown great forces in the field? Bacon.
 Thou rais'dst thy voice to record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalade of needy heroes, the terror of your peaceful citizens. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.
 SCALARY. adj. [from cala, Latin.] Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.
 He made at nearer distances certain elevated places and scalary ascents, that they might better ascend or mount their horses. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 To SCALD. v. a. [scaldare, Italian; calidus, Latin.] To burn with hot liquor.
 I am scalded with my violent motion. Shak. King John.
 And spleen of speed to see you. O majesty!

O majesty!
 When thou do'st pinch thy bearer, thou do'st fit
 Like a rich armour worn in heat of day, Shakespeare. Henry IV.
 That scalds with safety. Dryden.
 Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
 Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,
 Involving swiftly in one ruin all. Cowley.
 Scalding tears wore a channel where they fell. Dryden.
 That I grieve, 'tis true;
 But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair!
 And if a manly drop or two fall down,
 It scalds along my cheeks, like the greenward wind, glands.

The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scirrhus of the glands, is not to be cured.

SCHISM. n. f. [σχίσμα, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.

Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity. King Charles.

Oppose schisms by unity, hypocrity by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt's Sermons.

When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which are the schismatics: in the fence of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.

SCHISMATICAL. adj. [schismaticus, Fr. from schismatik.] Implying schism; practising schism.

By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatical proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.

Here bare anathema's fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the obdurate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt by being cut off from that body which they chuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South's Sermons.

SCHISMATICALLY. adv. [from schismatical.] In a schismatical manner.

SCHISMATICK. n. f. [from schism.] One who separates from the true church.

No known heretic nor schismatick should be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

Thus you behold the schismatick bravado's:
Wild speaks in squibs, and Calamy in granado's. Butler.

The schismatick united in a solemn league and covenant to alter the whole system of spiritual government. Swift.

of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.

SCHOLAR. n. f. [scholaris, Latin; ecolier, French.]

1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.

Many times that which deserveth approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the ancients. Hooker.

The scholars of the Stagyrite,
Who for the old opinion fight,
Would make their modern friends confess
The difference but from more to less. Prior.

2. A man of letters.

This same scholar's fate, res angusta domi, hinders the promoting of learning. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed for. Lake.

3. A pedant; a man of books.

To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar: they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.

4. One who has a lettered education.

My cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shakespeare. Henry VI.

SCHOLARSHIP. n. f. [from scholar.]

1. Learning; literature; knowledge.

It pited my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.

2. Literary education.

This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.

3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar.

SCHOLASTICAL. adj. [scholasticus, Latin.] Belonging to a scholar or school.

SCHOLASTICALLY. adv. [from scholastic.] According to the niceties or method of the schools.

No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice, but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of
it. South's Sermons.

SCHOLASTICK. adj. [from schola, Latin; scholastikus, French.]

1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.

I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning. Digby on Bedes.

Scholastick education, like a trade, does so fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Burne's Theory of the Earth.

2. Befitting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle. The

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastick speculations, were like the Olympick gamesters, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastick nicety. Stillingsfleet.

SCHOLIAST. n. f. [scholiastes, French; scholiastes, Latin.] A writer of explanatory notes.

The title of this fatyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholiasts 'tis infringed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobaeus cook'd before,
Or chew'd by blind o'd scholiasts o'er and o'er. Duncin.

SCHOLIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A note; an explanatory observation.

Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholion, for the explication of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.

Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholium, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHOLY. n. f. [scholus, Fr. scholium, Latin.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own precript form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded in the word, and grounded upon the words, are made all one. Hooker.

To SCHOLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To write explications.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to

They age the fame, their inclinations too,
And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.

2. A place of literary education.

My end being private, I have not express'd my conceptions in the language of the school.

Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilties, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction.

The calf bred to the rural trade,
Set him betimes to school, and let him be Instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.

No craz'd brain could ever yet propound,
Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
But some among these matters have been found,
Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Taylor.

5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers.

The first principles of Christian religion should not be forced

A schoolboy brought his mother a book he had stolen. L'Estr.

Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
How Semele of mortal race
By thunder died. Swift.

SCHOOLDAY. n. f. [school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.

Is all forgot?

All school days friendship, childhood, innocence? Shakespeare.

SCHOOLFELLOW. n. f. [school and fellow.] One bred at the same school.

Thy flatt'ring method on the youth pursue;
Join'd with his schoolfellow by two and two:
Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke. Dryden.

The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.

SCHOOLHOUSE. n. f. [school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.

Fair Una 'gan Fideia fair request,
To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd. Spenser.

SCHOOLMAN. n. f. [school and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute. Bacon.

Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.

2. One skilled in the divinity of the school.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.

To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
My sickness to physicians. Donne.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen. Baker.

Let subtle schoolmen teach these fiends to fight,
More studious to divide than to unite. Pope.

SCHOOLMASTER. n. f. [school and master.] One who prelates and teaches in a school.

I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. Shakespeare.

Adrian VI. was sometime schoolmaster to Charles V. Kneller.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbillus. Bacon.

A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South's Sermons.

SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. f. [school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have received from nature, that exact schoolmistress.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
Maintains her lazy husband. Gay's What d'ye Call it.

SCHRIGHT. n. f. A fish. Answorth.

SCHROGRAPHY. n. f. [schrographie, French; σχρογραφία, Gr.] This should be written with a z.

show the inside thereof. Bailey.

2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars. Bailey.

SCIATHERICAL. adj. [sciaterique, Fr. σκιανερικός, Gr.] Belonging to a sun-dial. Diet. This should be written sciatherical.

There were also, from great antiquity, sciatherical or sundials, by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours of the day; an invention ascribed unto Anaximenes by Pliny.

SCIATICA. n. f. [sciatica, French; ischiodica passio, Latin.]

SCIATICK. } The hip gout.

Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakef.

Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners. Shakespeare. Timon.

The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally molest with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone,
Will any mortal let himself alone? Pope.

SCI

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.
Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself within the bounds of reason. Dryd.
4. Any art or species of knowledge.
 No science doth make known the first principles, whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident. Hooker.
 Whatsoever we may learn by them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which mere discourse of wit and reason findeth out. Hooker.
 I profess you with a man Cunning in musick and the mathematics, Shakespeare.
 To instruct her fully in those sciences.
 The indisputable mathematics, the only science heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stagirite. Glauv. Scip.
5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy.
 Good sense, which only is the gift of heav'n,
 And though no science, fairly worth the sev'n. Pope.
- SCIENTIAL. adj. [from science.] Producing science.
 From the tree her step she turn'd;
 But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
 That dwelt within; whose presence had infused
 Into the plant sciential sap, deriv'd
 From nectar, drink of gods. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- SCIENTIFIC. adj. [from scientia, Fr. scientia and facio, Lat.]
 SCIENTIFIC. adj. Producing demonstrative knowledge; producing certainty.
 Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scientific progressions, and such as beget a sure or rational belief. Bacon's Vulg. Err.
 No where are there more quick, inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of scientific knowledge. Hume.
 No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against. South's Sermons.
 The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, scientific, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature. Locke.
- SCIENTIFICALLY. adv. [from scientific.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.
 Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is easier to believe than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.
- SCIMITAR. n. f. [See Cimeter.] A short sword with a convex edge.
 I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
 Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow. Shakespeare.
- SCINCY CLIF. n. f. A species of violet. Ainsworth.
- SCINK. n. f. A cast calf. Ainsworth. In Scotland and in London they call it scink.
- TO SCINTILLATE. v. n. [from scintilla, Latin.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.
 SCINTILLATION. n. f. [from scintilla, Lat. from scintilla.] The act of sparkling; sparks emitted.
 He faith the planets scintillation is not seen, because of their propinquity. Glauv. Scip.
 These scintillations are not the accession of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided. Brown.
- SCIOLIST. n. f. [from scire, Latin.] One who knows many things superficially.
 'Twas this vain idolizing of authors which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations: these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more generous discerners, but the pedantry of the affected sciolists. Glauv. Scip.
 These passages, in that book, were enough to humble the presumption of our modern sciolists, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance. Temple.
- SCIOLOUS. adj. [from scire, Latin.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing.
 I could wish these sciolous zealots had more judgment joined with their zeal. Havel.
- SCIOMACHY. n. f. [from sciamachia, Fr. scia and machia.] Battle with a shadow. 'Tis should be written sciamachy.
 To avoid this sciamachy, or imaginary combat of words, let me know, sir, what you mean by the name of tyrant? Cowley.
- SCION. n. f. [from scion, French.] A small twig taken from one tree to be engrafted into another.
 Sweet maid, we marry
 A gentle scion to the wildest stock;
 And make conceive a bark of baser kind,
 By bud of nobler race. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
 March is drawn in his left hand blossoms, and scions upon his arm.
 The scions are best of an old tree. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- SCIRE FACIAS. n. f. [Latin.] A writ judicial, in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court, whence

SCO

- it is sent, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made. This writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed, after the judgment given. Cowley.
- SCISSILE. adj. [from scissus, Latin.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.
 The differences of impenetrable and not impenetrable, scissile and not scissile, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions. Paton.
- SCISSILE. adj. [from scissus, Fr. scissile, Latin.] Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.
 Animal fat is a sort of amphibious substance, scissile like a solid, and resolvable by heat. Arbutnot.
- SCISSON. n. f. [from scissor, French; scissus, Latin.] The act of cutting.
 Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action. W. Johnson's Surgery.
- SCISSOR. n. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cisors, from cado, or incido; others scissors, from scindere; and some cisors, cizars, or scissors, cizous, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.
 His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
 And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
 Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair:
 My master preaches patience to him, and the while His man with scissors nicks him for a fool. Shakespeare.
 Wanting the scissors, with these hands I'll tear,
 If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair. Prior.
 When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills,
 Sir Roger wore a pair of scissors in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely. Arbutnot.
- SCISSURE. n. f. [from scissus, Latin.] A crack; a rent; a fissure.
 The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.
- SCLEROTICK. adj. [from scleroticus, Fr. scleroticus.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.
 The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunics of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.
- SCLEROTICKS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Medicines which harden and consolidate the parts they are applied to. Quincy.
- TO SCOAT. v. a. To stop a wheel by putting a stone or to SCOCH. v. a. piece of wood under it before. Dailp.
- TO SCOFF. v. n. [from schoppen, Dutch.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contemptuous language. With an.
- Of two noblemen of the West of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a stout or dry blow given?
 There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophane to scoff at religion. Tillotson.
- Such is love,
 And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
 The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
 And scuffs at the vain wisdom of the wife. Rome.
- SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contemptuous language.
 Our answer therefore to their reasons is no; to their scuffs nothing.
 With scuffs and scorns, and contemptuous taunts,
 In open market-place produce'd they me. Shakespeare. B. VI.
 How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scuffs and the sharpest invectives?
 Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scuff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science. Watson.
- SCOFFER. n. f. [from scuff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scooner; contemptuous reproacher.
 I must tell you friendly in your ear,
 Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:
 Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer;
 Foul is most foul, being found to be a scoffer. Shakespeare.
 Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scuffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies. Government of the Tongue.
 Consider what the apostle tells these scuffers they were ignorant of, not that there was a deluge; but he tells them, that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were of so constituted. Earnest's Theory of the Earth.
- SCOFFING. adv. [from scuffing.] In contempt; in ridicule.
 Aristotle applied this hemistich scuffling to the hyacinths at Athens. Erasmus's Notes to the Odyssey.
- TO SCOLD. v. n. [from scholden, Dutch.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.
 Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever
 I'm forc'd to scold. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

SCO

- The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
 As the other is for beauteous modesty. Shakespeare.
 They attacked me, some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting, and others scolding and reviling. Stillington.
- Pallas meets the queen of love;
 For gods, we are by Homer told,
 Can in celestial language scold. Swift.
- SCOLD. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, rude, mean, low, foul-mouthed woman.
 A threw in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Addison's Freeholder.
- Sun-burnt matrons mending old nets;
 Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between;
 Scolds answer foul-mouth'd scolds. Swift.
- SCOLDOP. n. f. [Written properly scallop.] A pectinated shell-fish.
 SCOLOPENDRA. n. f. [Scolopendra, French; σκολοπενδρα.] 1. A sort of venomous serpent.
 2. [Scolopendrina, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- SCOMM. n. f. [Perhaps from scomma, Latin.] A buffoon. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.
 The scomm, or buffoons of quality, are wolves in conversation. L'Estrange.
- SCORCE. n. f. [from schantz, German.] 1. A fort; a bulwark.
 Such fellows are perfect in the great commanders names, and they learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a score, at such a breach. Shakespeare. Henry V.
2. The head; perhaps as being the aeropoli, or citadel of the body. A low word.
 Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the score with a dirty thovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Shakespeare. Hamlet.
3. A penile candlestick, generally with a looking-glass to reflect the light.
 Golden scorces hang upon the walls,
 To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden's Lucret.
 Triumphant Uriah, on a score's height,
 Clapp'd his glad wings, and fat to view the fight. Pope.
 Put candles into scorces. Swift's Direct to the Butler.
- TO SCORCE. v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived playfully by Stinner, whose cynologies are generally rational, from score, as it signifies the head; to score being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mulct; to fine. A low word which ought not to be retained.
 Scoop. n. f. [from schopen, Dutch.] 1. A kind of large ladle; a vessel with a long handle used to throw out liquor.
 They turn upside down hops on malt-kilns, when almost dry, with a scoop. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 Endeavour with thy scoop, or fingers, to force the stone outwards. Sharp's Surgery.
2. A sweep; a stroke. Perhaps it should be scowp.
 On hell-kite!
 What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
 At one fell scoop! Shakespeare. Macbeth.
- TO SCOOP. v. a. [from schopen, Dutch.] 1. To lade out.
 As by the brook he flood,
 He scooped the water from the crystal flood. Dryden's Zen.
2. This word seems to have not been understood by Thamson.
 Melted Alpine snows
 The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores
 Of water scooped among the hollow rocks. Thamson.
3. To empty by lading.
 If some penurious source by chance appear'd,
 Scanty of waters, when you scooped it dry,
 And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
 Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him? Addison.
4. To carry off in any thing hollow.
 A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scooped out of that hollow space.
 Her fore-feet are broad, that the may scoop away much earth at a time. Addison.
5. To cut hollow, or deep.
 Whatever part of the harbour they scoop in, it has an influence on all the rest; for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level. Addison on Italy.
 Those caruncles the Indians will scoop, so as to hold above a pint. Arbutnot on Count.
- To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
 Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
 A forty staff we dextrously apply'd,
 Which, in the spacious socket turning round, Scoop'd out the big round gelly from its orb. Addison.
 It much conduces how to scare
 The little race of birds, that hop
 From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit, Inflated, undisturb'd. Phillips.

SCO

- The genius of the place
 Or helps th' ambitious hill the heav'n to scale;
 Or scops in circling theatres the vale. Pope.
- SCOOPER. n. f. [from scop.] One who scoops.
 SCOPE. n. f. [from scop, Latin.] 1. Aim; intention; drift.
 Your scope is as mine own,
 So to enforce or qualify the laws;
 As to your soul seems good. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
 His coming hither hath no farther scope
 Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees. Shakespeare. R. II.
 Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison's Freeholder.
2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.
 The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hobbes.
- Now was time
 To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hulbert's Tale.
 We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Raleigh.
- He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
 Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair,
 And utter dissolution, as the scope
 Of all his aim. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.
 An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination. Dryden.
 These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton's Opt.
4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
 If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it reflecteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hobbes.
- Ah, cut my lace asunder,
 That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
 Or else I swoon with this dead killing news. Shakespeare.
5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.
 Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them,
 For what I bid them do. Shakespeare.
 Being moody, give him line and scope,
 'Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Confound themselves with working. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
6. Act of riot; fallacy.
 As surfeit is the father of much fast,
 So every scope, by the immoderate use,
 Turns to restraint. Shakespeare.
7. Extended quantity.
 The scopes of land granted to the first adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for subjects. Davies on Ireland.
8. It is out of use, except in the three first senses.
 SCOPULOUS. adj. [from scopulus, Latin.] Full of rocks. DiD.
- SCORBU'ICAL. n. f. [from scorbiculus, Fr. from scorbutus, Latin.] SCORBU'TICK. adj. Dificated with the scurvy.
 A person about forty, of a full and scorbiculous body, having broke her skin, endeavour'd the curing of it; but observing the ulcer sanious, I propos'd digestion. W. Johnson.
 Violent purging hurts scorbiculous constitutions; lenitive substances relieve. Arbutnot.
- SCORBU'TICALLY. adv. [from scorbiculus.] With tendency to the scurvy; in the scurvy.
 A woman of forty, scorbiculously and hydropically affected, having a forid ulcer, put herself into my hand. W. Johnson.
- SCORCE. n. f. This word is used by Spenser for discourse, or power of reason.
 Lively vigour rested in his mind,
 And recompens'd him with a better score;
 Weak body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force. F. S.
- TO SCORCH. v. a. [from scorch, Saxon, burnt.] 1. To burn superficially.
 Fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon's Nat. History.
 The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
 The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire;
 The faint knights were scorch'd. Dryden.
2. To burn.
 Power was given to scorch men with fire. Rev. xvi. 8.
 The same that left thee by the cooling stream,
 Safe from sun's heat; but scorch'd with beauty's beam. Fairf.
 You

SCO

You look with such contempt on pain,
That languishing you conquer more;
So lightnings which in storms appear,
Scorch more than when the skies are clear.
The flame beams that shine, scorch too.
I rave,
And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,
Fly round the fire that scorches me to death.
He from whom the nations should receive Justice and freedom, lies himself a slave;
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorched by brutal fires.
To SCORCH. v. n. To be burnt superficially; to be dried up.
To see the chariot of the sun
So near the scorching country run.
The love was made in Autumn, and the hunting followed properly, when the heats of that scorching country were declining.
Scatter a little mungy straw or fern amongst your seedlings, to prevent the roots from scorching, and to receive the moisture that falls.
SCORCHING Fennel. n. f. A plant.
SCORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An herb.
SCORE. n. f. [Scora, Ilandick, a mark, cut, or notch.]
1. A notch of long incision.
Our forefathers had no other books, but the score and the tally: thou hast caused printing to be used. Shaksp. Henry VI.
2. A line drawn.
3. An account, which, when writing was less common, was kept by marks on tallies, or by lines of chalk.
He's worth no more:
They say he parted well, and paid his score. Shaksp. Macb.
Does not the air feed the flame? And does not the flame warm and enlighten the air? Does not the earth quit scores with all the elements, in the fruits that issue from it. South.
4. Account kept of something past.
Universal deluges have swept all away, except two or three persons who begun the world again upon a new score. Tilleyson.
5. Debt imputed.
That thou do'st love her, strikes some scores away
From the great compt. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
He can win widows and pay scores,
Out-flatter favourites, or out-lie either Jovius or Surlus, or both together. Donne.
6. Reason; motive.
The knight, upon the fore-nam'd score,
In quest of Sidrophel advancing,
Was now in prospect of the mansion.
He had been prentice to a brewer,
But left the trade, as many more
Have lately done on the same score. Hudibras.
A lion, that had got a politick fit of sickness, wrote the fox word how glad he should be of his company, upon the score of ancient friendship. L'Estrange.
If your terms are moderate, we'll never break off upon that score. Cellier on Pride.
7. Sake; account; reason referred to some one.
You act your kindness on Cydaria's score. Dryden.
Kings in Greece were depoted by their people upon the score of their arbitrary proceedings. Swift.
8. Twenty. I suppose, because twenty, being a round number, was distinguished on tallies by a long score.
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour? Shaksp. Cymbeline.
The fewer fill you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one; but Harpax is a score. Pope.
For some scores of lines there is a perfect absence of that spirit of poetry. Watts.
9. A song in SCORE. The words with the musical notes of a song annexed.
To SCORE. v. a.
1. To set down as a debt.
Madam, I know when Instead of five you scor'd me ten. Swift.
2. To impute; to charge.
Your follies and debauches charge
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score 'em on the stage;
Unless each vice in short-hand they indite,
Ev'n as notch prentices whole sermons write. Dryden.
3. To mark by a line.
Hast thou appointed where the moon should rise,
And with her purple light adorn the skies?
Scor'd out the bounded sun's oblique ways,
That he on all might spread his equal rays?
SCORIE. n. f. [Latin.] Drofs; recreation.
The scorie, or vitrified part, which most metals, when heated or melted, do continually protrude to the surface, and which, by covering the metals in form of a thin glassy skin, causes these colours, is much denser than water. Neut. Opt.
SCORIOUS. adj. [from scoria, Lat.] Drossy; recrementitious.
By the fire they emit many drossy and scorious parts. Brewer.

SCO

To SCORN. v. a. [schernen, Dutch; escorner, French.] To despise; to slight; to revile; to vilify; to contemn.
My friends scorn me; but mine eye poureth out tears unto God. Jeb xvi. 20.
To SCORN. v. n. To scoff.
He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And now, I am remember'd, scor'd at me. Shaksp. Lear.
Our soul is filled with the scorn of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud. Pf. cxviii. 4.
I've seen the new-born day
Hover o'er the morning's lovely ray
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scor'd to think of night.
Fame, that delights around the world to stray, Scorns not to take our Argos in her way. Pope's Statius.
SCORN. n. f. [Scorne, old Fr. from the verb.] Contempt; scoff; slight; act of contumely.
If he do fully prove himself the honest shepherd Menalcas his brother and heir, I know no reason why you should think scorn of him.
Unto thee will I cry, O Lord: think no scorn of me, lest if thou make as tho' thou hearest not, I become like them that go down into the pit. Pf. xxviii. 1.
We were better parch in Africk's sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shaksp. Lear.
Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears. Shaksp. Lear.
If we draw her not unto us, she will laugh us to scorn. Id.
Diogenes was asked in scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers?
He answered, because the one knew what they wanted, the others did not. Bacon.
Whoever hath any thing in his person that induces contempt, hath also a perpetual spur to refuse himself from scorn:
therefore all deformed persons are bold, as being on their own defence as exposed to scorn. Bacon.
Every fullen frown and bitter scorn,
But fann'd the fuel that too fast did burn. Dryden.
Is it not a most horrid ingratitude, thus to make a score of him that made us? Tilleyson.
Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations
For breach of publick vows. Addison's Cato.

paid me scot and lat too. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Proteogenes, historians note,
Liv'd there a burges, scot and lat. Prior.

SCO

The chief point that has puzzled the freeholders, as well as those that pay scot and lat, for about these six months, is, whether they would rather be governed by a prince that is obliged by law to be good, or by one who, if he pleases, may plunder or imprison. Addison.
To SCOTCH. v. a. To cut with shallow incisions.
He was too hard for him directly: before Corioli, he scotcht and notcht him like a carbonado. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
SCOTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A flight cut; a shallow incision.
We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet room for six scotches more. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Give him four scotches with a knife, and then put into his belly and these scotches sweet herbs. Walton's Angler.

and scotch hopping would be the same thing to them. Locke.
SCOTOMY. n. f. [Scotomus.] A dizziness or swimming in the head, causing dimness of sight, wherein external objects seem to turn round. Anf. and Bailey.
SCOTTERING. A provincial word which denotes, in Herefordshire, a custom among the boys of burning a wad of pease-straw at the end of harvest. Bailey.
SCOTVEL. n. f. [Scotpa, Latin.] A sort of mop of clouts for sweeping an oven; a maulkin. Anf. and Bailey.
SCOTVNDREL. n. f. [Scotvndrel, Italian, a hider. Skinner.] A mean rascal; a low petty villain.
Now to be baff'd by a scotvndrel,
An upstart scottry, and a mungrel. Hudibras.
Scotvndrels as these wretched Ombites be,
Canopus they exceed in luxury. Tate.
Go, if your ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scotvndrels ever since the flood,
Go, and pretend your family is young;
Nor own your fathers have been fools so long. Pope.
To SCOUR. v. a. [Scour, Danish; schauern, Dutch.]
1. To rub hard with any thing rough, in order to clean the surface.
I were better to be eaten to death with a rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion. Shaksp. Hen. IV.
By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,
And scour his armour from the rust of peace. Dryden's Zen.
Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax, and point the dart. Dryden.
Some blamed Mrs. Bull for grudging a quarter of a pound of soap and sand to scour the rooms. Arbutnot.
Poor Vadius, long with learned spleen devour'd,
Can taste no pleasure since his face was scour'd. Pope.
2. To purge violently.
To cleanse; to bleach; to whiten; to blanch.
In some lakes the water is so nitrous, as, if foul clothes be put into it, it scours them of itself; and, if they stay, they moulder away. Bacon's Natural History.
A garden-worm should be well scour'd eight days in mofs, before you fish with him. Walton's Angler.
Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
The new scour'd manteau, and the flattest air. Gay.
4. To remove by scouring.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shaksp. Henry V.
I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it. Shaksp.
Then, in the clemency of upward air,
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's fear. Dryden.
5. To range in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.
The kings of Lacedemon having set out some gallees, under the charge of one of their nephews, to scour the sea of the pirates, they met us. Sidney.
Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.
If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,
And do'st in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Please not thyself the flat ring crowd to hear,
'Tis fulsome stuff. Dryden's Pers.
6. To pass swiftly over.
Sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left.
Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie grovelling on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

SCO

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labours, and the words move slow;
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skins along the main. Pope's Essay on Criticism.
To SCOUR. v. n.
1. To perform the office of cleaning domestick utensils.
I keep his house, and was to wring, brew, bake, scour, drefs meat, and make the beds. Shaksp. Lear.
2. To clean.
Warm water is softer than cold; for it scours better. Bac.
3. To be purged or lax.
Some apothecaries, upon stamping colocoquintida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.
Convulsion and scouring, they say, do often cause one another. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
If you turn sheep into wheat or rye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scour. Mortimer's Husbandry.
4. To rove; to range.
Barbarossa, thus scouring along the coast of Italy, struck an exceeding terror into the minds of the citizens of Rome. Knall.
5. To run here and there.
The enemy's drum is heard, and fearful scouring Doth choke the air with dust. Shak. Timon.
6. To run with great eagerness and swiftness; to scamper.
She from him fled with all her pow'r;
Who after her as hastily 'gan to scour. Fairy Queen.
I saw men scour on their way: Icy'd them Even to their ships. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away he scours to learn the truth. L'Estrange.
If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning. L'Estrange.
So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threatening cries they fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer. Dryden.
As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the out-guards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters. Collier.
Swift at her call her husband scour'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.
SCOURER. n. f. [from scour.]
1. One that cleans by rubbing.
2. A purge.
3. One who runs swiftly.
SCOURGE. n. f. [Scourges, French; scoraggia, Italian; corri-gia, Latin.]
1. A whip; a lash; an instrument of discipline.
When he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple. Jo. ii. 15.
The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance. Milton.
2. A punishment; a vindictive affliction.
What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? Shaksp. Lear.
See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love. Shaksp.
Famine and plague are sent as scourges for amendment. 2 Lfd.
3. One that afflicts, harasses, or destroys. Thus Attila was called flagellum Dei.
Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers fill their babes? Sh. H.VI.
Such conquerors are not the favourites, but scourges of God,
the instruments of that vengeance. Atterbury's Sermon.
In all these trials I have born a part;
I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart. Pope.
Immortal Jove,
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
Or bless a people willing to obey,
But crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.
3. A whip for a top.
If they had a top, the scourge stick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Locke.
To SCOURGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To lash with a whip; to whip.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices Make instruments to scourge us. Shaksp. King Lear.
Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Hebr.
Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman, and uncondemned?
Acts xxii. 25.
He scourg'd with many a stroke the indignant waves. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When a professor of any religion is set up to be laughed at, this cannot help us to judge of the truth of his faith, any better than if he were scourged. Watts.
23 H. 2. To

SCR

2. To punish; to chastise; to chasten; to castigate with any punishment or affliction.
Seeing that thou hast been scourged from heaven, declare the mighty power of God. 2 Mac. iii. 34.

He will scourge us for our iniquities, and will have mercy again. Tob. xiii. 5.
SCOURGER. n. f. [from scourge.] One that scourges; a punisher or chastiser.
To SCOURSE. v. a. To exchange one thing for another; to swap. Ansford. It seems a corruption of scorja, Ital. exchange; and hence a barf, scourer.
SCOUT. n. f. [from scouter, auscultare, Lat. to listen; scouta, Italian.] One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.
Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin? Shakespeare.
As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn, Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill.
This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations.
The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore The coasts. Dryden's Æn.
To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.] To go out in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.
Oft on the bordering deep Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing Scout far and wide into the realm of night, Scorning surprize. Milton.
As a hunted panther casts about
Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to scout,
So she, to thum his toils, her cares employ'd. Dryden.
Command a party out.
With a strict charge not to engage, but scout. Dryden.
To SCOWL. v. n. [from sculan, Saxon; scula sig, to look four, Islandick.] To frown; to pout; to look angry, frow, or fullen.
Miso, having now her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a flavinging-good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.
With bent lowering brows, as the would threat,
She scowl'd and frowned with froward countenance. F. 2.
Even so, or with much more contempt, mens eyes
Did scowl on Richard. Shakespeare's Richard II.
Not a courier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The dusky clouds o'erspread
Heav'n's cheerful face, the low'ring element Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape frow or show'r. Milton.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
With your dull influence; it is for you
To fit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.
In such gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling heavens Cast a deploring eye. Thomson's Summer.
SCOWL. v. f. [from the verb.] Look of fullness or discontent; gloom.
I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day,
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night;
When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night,
To blot the newly-blossom'd light. Crashaw.
SCOWLINGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With a frowning and fullen look.
To SCRA'BBLE. v. n. [from krabbelen, scrabbelen, to scrape or scratch, Dutch.] To paw with the hands.

Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw. Milton.
SCRAP. n. f. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]
1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.
It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glenn.
Trencher equires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.
Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Leah.
No rag, no scraps, of all the beau, or wit,
That once so flattered, and that once so writ. Pope.
I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.
2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.
The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dithes,
With scraps o' th' court, is no contract. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds, for their own scraps and advantage. Bacon.
On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head
To bleakest colds. Granv.
What has he else to bait his traps,
Or bring his vermin in, but scraps? Swift.
The offals of a church distrest,
A hungry vicarage.
3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.
Pregnant with thousands sits the scrip unseen,
And silent tells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.

To SCREAM. v. n. [from scram, Saxon.]
1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.
Soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming found,
As of a dame distress'd, who cry'd for aid,
And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.
The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring found resounds, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.
If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,
Can finely counterfeit a fright;
So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,
She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.
2. To cry shrilly.
I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry. Shakespeare.
SCREAM. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick loud cry of terror or pain.

And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies. Pope.
To SCREECH. v. n. [from skreek, to cry, Islandick.]
1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.
Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits. Bacon.
2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.
SCREECH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Cry of horror and anguish.
2. Harsh horrid cry.
The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.
SCREECHOWL. n. f. [from screech and owl.] An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.
Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechowl crys, and bandogs howl. Shakespeare.
Let him, that will a screechowl ay be call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead. Shakespeare.
By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob. Dryden.
Jupiter, though he had hung the balance, and given it a jog to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Dryden.
O, that screechowl at the window! we shall be pursued immediately. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Sooner shall screechowls bask in sunny days,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.
SCREEN. n. f. [from screen, French.]
1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.
Now near enough, your heavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.

SCR

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages.

My juniors by a year,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between,
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling.

Any thing used to exclude cold or light.
When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth.

One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen.
Ladies make their old cloaths into patchwork for screens and stools.

A riddle to fit sand.
To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of the earth and seats of men,
From cold Septentrion blasts.

A good magistrate's retinue of flats screen him from the dangers, which he is to incur for the sake of it.

This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion.

Let the cases be filled with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screen'd.

SCREW. n. f. [from serue, Dutch; seren, French.] One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former.

The serew is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a velocity at one end of it.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the serew press, which is the best.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To turn by a screw.

If we should fail—
But serew your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail.

Some, when the press by utmost vigour serew'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse.

To fasten with a screw.
To serew your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the flank of the screw.

To deform by contortions.
Sometimes a violent laughter serew'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace.

With serew'd face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other.

He serew'd his face into a harden'd smile,
And said Sebastian knew to govern slaves.

Let others serew their hypocritical face,
She shews her grief in a sincerer place.

To force; to bring by violence.
He resolved to govern by subaltern ministers, who serew'd up the pins of power too high.

No discourse can be administered, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will serew in here and there some intimations of what they said or did.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and serew'd up, may be computed to be about two millions.

To squeeze; to press.
To oppress by extortion.
Our country landlords, by unmeasurable serewing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France.

SCREW TREE. n. f. [from sera, Latin.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

To SCRIBBLE. v. a. [from scribo, Latin.]
1. To fill with artless or worthless writing.

How gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentric, scribble'd o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

To write without care or beauty.
If a man should affirm, that an ape casually meeting with pen, ink and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that.

SCR

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are, who judge still worse than he can write.

Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more.
Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.

By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language.

A petty author; a writer without worth.
The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit.

The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,
And to your genius must conform his line.

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal hung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers.

No body was concerned or surpris'd, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce.

A writer.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!

His love to Antony.
My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter.

A certain scribe came and said, master, I will follow thee.
We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes.

The following letter comes from some notable young female scribe.

A publick notary.
SCRIMER. n. f. [from serimew, French.] A gladiator; a fencing master. Not in use.

The scrimer of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them.

A place in which writings or curiosities are deposited.
Help then, O holy virgin,
Thy weaker novice to perform thy will;

Lay forth, out of thine everlasting serim,
The antique rolls which there lie hidden still.

A small bag; a fatchel.
Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

He'd in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And drew me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.

A schedule; a small writing.
Call them generally man by man, according to the scrip.

Bills of exchange cannot pay our debts abroad, 'till scrips of paper can be made current coin.

That which is contained in a scrip.

Written; not orally delivered.
SCRIPTORY. adj. [from scriptorius, Latin.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.

By creatures, the scriptural use of that word determines it sometimes to men.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures, but famous for the death and overthrow of Crassus.

Sacred writing; the Bible.
With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scriptures, which we account a thing most necessary.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose:
An evil soul producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.

There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition for it.

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, 'till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry.

Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross 'em?
The author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work, shall not eat.

SCR

SCRIVENER. n. f. [from scribo, Latin.]
1. One who draws contracts.

We'll pass the business privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener.

How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,
And from the griping scrivener free?

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and usurers, that suck the heart and blood.

A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores commonly called the king's evil.

If matter in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a scrofula.

Disseated with the scrofula.
SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Difeated with the scrofula.
Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished; for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery.

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure?

[Supposed by Minshaw to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from seruella, a firrump given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is seru.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd,
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls.

That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes.

Accept this scroll,
Which, in right of Richard Plantagenet,
We do exhibit to your majesty.

See'st thou this letter, take it up,
And give the king this fatal plotted scroll.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scrolls, that tell of this war's loss,
With laughter coupled to the name of kings.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he curst and bann'd the Christians.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul.

Yet if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take you' beauteous, my tick, flary roll,
And burn it, like an ucleis parchment scroll.

It seems derived from seruella, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a scab from his raggedness. A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scrolls of Angiers shout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre.

To rub hard with something coarse and rough.
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when, with a grace,
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes.

Now Moll had whir'd her mop with dextrous airs, Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs.

A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

Any thing mean or despicable.
With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;
No little scrub joint shall come on my board.

A worn out broom.
SCRUBBED. adj. [from scrub, Danish.] Mean; vile; worthless.
I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack,
Can set the mastiff on your back.
The fence a wood, produc'd no more Than a few scrubby trees before.

The same, I suppose, with scruf, by a metaphorical use in pronunciation.

SCR

SCRUPLE. n. f. [from scrupule, French; scrupulus, Latin.]
1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute things.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To your good truth.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his success, than the content of all states of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question.

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety; and unnecessary scruples, which only intangle the soul.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else.

Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.
Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate; the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth.

Proverbially, any small quantity.
Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thrifty goddess, determines Herself the glory of a creditor.

To doubt; to hesitate.
He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms.

A doubter; one who has scruples.
The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptised, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptised by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers.

Amongst ourselves there was some question mov'd, by reason of a few mens scrupulosity touching certain things.

The one sort they warn'd to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving undivided sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations.

Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.
The first sacrilege is looked on with some horror; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires.

Decay of Piety.
SCRUPULOUS. adj. [from scrupulus, French; scrupulosus, Latin.]
1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warn'd them that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty, to the offence of their weak brethren which were scrupulous.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days.

Given to objections; captious.
Equality of two domestick pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction.

Nice; doubtful.
As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous.

Careful; vigilant; cautious.
I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences drawn from these observations are of some importance.

Carefully; nicely, anxiously.
The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours.

Henry V. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe the success of it to himself.

The state of being scrupulous.
SCRUPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from scrupulus.]

Discoverable by inquiry.
Shall we think God so scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us?

Search; examination; inquiry.
SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutor, Latin.] Enquirer; searcher; examiner.

SCU

In process of time, from being a simple scutator, an archdeacon became to have jurisdiction more amply; scutator.
SCUTINOUS. adj. [from scutiny.] Captious; full of inquiries. A word little used.
Age is froward, uneasy, scutinous.
Hard to be pleas'd, and parcimonious. Denham.
SCUTINITY. n. f. [from scutino, Latin.] Enquiry; search; examination with nicety.
In the scutinitas for righteousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scutiny, that I might learn
In what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The son of God. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
They that have designed exactness and deep scutiny, have taken some one part of nature. Hale.
Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason well rectify'd must nature teach;
And these high scutinitas are subjects fit
For man's all-searching and enquiring wit. Denham.
We are admonish'd of want of charity towards others, and want of a Christian scutiny and examination into ourselves.
L'Estrange.
When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth, which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, somewhat may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scutiny.
These, coming not within the scutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body. Locke.
To SCUTINIZE. v. a. [from scutiny.] To search; to examine.
The compromissari should chuse according to the votes of such, whose votes they were obliged to scutinize. Bayly.

drawers for writings.
I locked up these papers in my scutire, and my scutire came to be unlocked.
To SCUTZE. v. a. [Perhaps from scute.] This word, though now disused by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scutze, in the London jargon.] To squeeze; to compress.
Though up he caught him 'twixt his puffed hands,
And having scutzed out of his cartion corse
The loathful life, now loos'd from sinful bands,
Upon his shoulders carried him. Fairy Queen.
To SCUD. v. n. [from scute, Italian; scutta, Swedish; scutur, Swiss, Icelandic.] To fly; to run away with precipitation.
The vote was no sooner pass'd, but away they scudded to the next lake. L'Estrange.
The frightened fatys, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with prick'd-up ears take flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn-foot ply,
About their fires the little sylvans cry. Dryden.
Away the frightened spectre scuds,
And leaves my lady in the fuds. Swift.
To SCUDGLE. v. n. [from scud.] To run with a kind of infected haste or precipitation. A low word.
SCUFFLE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from scuffie.]
A confused quarrel; a tumultuous boil.
His captain's heart,
In the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the corner, take much pleasing diversions, by deriding our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing. Decay of Piety.
The dog leaps upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned. L'Estrange.
Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and insults. Addison.
To SCUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.
I must confess I've seen, in former days,
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some frays. Dryden.
A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.
To SCULK. v. n. [from sculke, Danish.] To lurk in hiding places;
to be close.
It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it seems any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly. Gov. of Tongue.
Peering to be seen, within a bed
Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head;
There sculk'd 'till afternoon, and watch'd his time. Dryden.
My prophets and my popishists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war;
Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat; from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And sculk behind the subterfuge of art. Prior.

No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say
The girl had such a bashful way.
The immediate publishers thereof lay sculling under the wings of an act of parliament. Letter to Publisher of the Dunc.
SCULKER. n. f. [from sculk.] A lurker; one that hides himself for shame or mischief.
SCULL. n. f. [It is derived by Skinner from shell, in some provinces called shell; as testa and teste, or tete, signify the head.
Mr. Lye observes more satisfactorily, that sculla is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]
1. The bone which incloses and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.
Fractures of the scull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.
2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCULLER.]
3. One who rows a cockboat.
Like cauld vile, that for mischief
Rides with his face to rumple of flood;
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love;
Look one way and another move. Hudibras.
4. [See Scoule, Saxon, an assembly.] In Milton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.
Each bay
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oit Bank the mid sea. Milton.
SCULLCAP. n. f. [from scull and cap.]
1. A headpiece.
2. A nightcap.
SCULLER. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology.
Sculla is in Islandick a vessel, and scuelle in French a dish.]
1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower:
Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And fliv'ring in the leaky sculler fate. Dryden.
They hire the sculler, and, when once aboard,
Grow licks, and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.
2. One that rows a cockboat.
SCULLERY. n. f. [from sculla, a vessel, Islandick; or scuelle, French, a dish.] The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.
Pyreus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and setting rogues together by the ears. Pope.
SCULLION. n. f. [from scuelle, French, a dish.] The lowest domestick servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.
I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing like a very drab,
A scullion, eye upon't! foh! about my brain. Shak. Hamlet.
If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook, the stablemen, and the scullion, to stand in his way. Swift.
To SCULP. v. a. [from sculp, Latin; sculper, Fr.] To carve; to engrave. A word not in use.
Oh, that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculpt with steel on rocks of adamant! Candish.
SCULPTILE. adj. [from sculptilis, Latin.] Made by carving.
In a silver medal is upon one side sculpt Moses, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images. Beacon.
SCULPTOR. n. f. [from sculptor, Latin; sculptar, Fr.] A carver;
one who cuts wood or stone into images.
Thy shape's in every part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryden.
The Latin poets give the epithets of trifidum and trifidum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.
SCULPTURE. n. f. [from sculptura, Latin; sculpture, French.]
1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone into images.
Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live. Pope.
2. Carved work.
Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze with bossy sculptures grev'n. Milton.
There too, in living sculpture, might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.
3. The art of engraving.
To SCULPTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut; to en-grave.
Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.
SCUM. n. f. [from scume, French; schiuma, Italian; schym, Danish; schym, Dutch.]
1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.
The rest had several offices assign'd;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise;
Others to bear the same away did mind;
And others it to use according to his kind. Fairy Queen.
The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom. Beacon.
Gather'd like scum, and sett'd to itself,
Self-fed and self-consum'd. Milton.
Away,

SCU

That fill rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryden.
They mix a med cine to foment their limbs,
With scum that on the molten liver swims. Dryden.
2. The dross; the refuse, the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.
There docted unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that e're long he had a mighty army. Speiser.
Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged. Raleigh's Essays.
I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, bafe scum. Hudibras.
The Seythian and Egyptian scum
Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.
You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jays. Dryden's Juven.
The great and innocent are insulted by the scum and refuse of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
To SCUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum.
Commonly written and spoken skim.
A second multitude
Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross. Milton.
Hear, ye fullen powers below;
Hear, ye talkers of the dead:
You that boiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
What corns swim upon the top of the brine, scum off. Mort.
SCUMMER. n. f. [from scum, French.] A vessel with which liquor is skimmed, commonly called a skimmer.
SCUPPER HOLES. n. f. [from scupen, Dutch, to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers, and the nails with which they are fastened scupper nails. Bailey.
SCURF. n. f. scurf, Saxon; skurfa, Islandick; skurff, Danish; scurf, Swedish; scorff, Dutch.]
1. A kind of dry military itch.
Her crusty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honourable old,
Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. Fairy Queen.
The virtue of his hands
Was lost among Paolus' fands,
Against whose torrent while he swims,
The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.
2. A soil or stain adherent.
Then are they happy, when by length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime,
No peck is left. Dryden.
3. Any thing sticking on the surface.
There stood a hill, whose grizzly top Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.
Upon throwing in a stone the water boils; and at the same time are seen little fishes of scurf rising up. Addison.
SCURVINESS. n. f. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.
SCURVIL. adj. [from scurf, Latin.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; loudly jocular.
With him, Patroclus.
Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day Breaks scurril jets. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurril scoffing. Ben. Johnson.
Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurril taunts. Dryden.
SCURVILTY. n. f. [from scurf, Fr. scurvilitas, Lat.] Groinels of reproach; looseness of jocularly; mean buffoonery.
Good master Holofernes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurvility. Shakesp.
Banish scurvility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.
SCURVILIOUS. adj. [from scurvilis, Latin.] Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the license of a buffoon can warrant; loudly jocular; vile; low.
Yet is not their goodness so intolerable, as, on the contrary side, the scurvilous and more than satyrical immodesty of Martinism. Hooker.
Let him approach singing.
—Forewarn him that he use no scurvilous words in his tunes.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurvilous a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind?
Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by scurvilous and enraged orators. Swift.
SCURVILOUSLY. adv. [from scurvilous.] With gross reproach;
with low buffoonery; with lewd merriment.
Such men there are, who have written scurvilously against me, without any provocation. Dryden.
It is barbarous incivility scurvilously to sport with that which others count religion. Tillotson.

SEA

SEAVILY. adv. [from sear.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.
Look i' your glass now,
And see how seavily that countenance frowns;
You would be loth to own it. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
This alters the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very seavily, and makes it perfect. South.
The clergy were never more learned, or so seavily treated. Swift.
SEAVY. n. f. [from sear.] This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.
The seavy is a distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries, and amongst those such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water, fresh or salt; invading chiefly in the Winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented farinaceous vegetables, and drink bad water. Arbutnot.
SEAVY. adj. [from sear, seavy, seavy.]
1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the seavy.
Whatsoever man be seavy or scabbed. Lev. xxi. 20.
2. Vile; bad; forry; worthless; contemptible; offensive.
I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not seavy, nor a temporary modder. Shakesp.
This is a very seavy tune to sing to a man's funeral. Shakesp.
He spoke seavy and provoking terms Against your honour. Shakesp.
A crane, which is but seavy meat, lays but two eggs. Chrys.
It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that seavy custom of taking tobacco. Swift.
SEAVYGRASS. n. f. [from sear and grass.] The spoonwort. A plant.
The flower consists of four leaves, which are disposed in form of a cross: from the flower-cup arises the pointal, which becomes an almost globular fruit, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are furnished with many round seeds. Miller.
SEAVES. For excuses.
I shifted him away,
And laid good seaves on your ecstasy. Shakesp. Othello.
SEAV. n. f. [from sear, Islandick.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short, as a hare.
In the hare it is averily seated, and in its distention inclines unto the coccox or seav. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear,
He left his seav behind, and half an ear. Swift.
SEAVCHEON. n. f. [from sear, Italian, from searum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns armorial of a family. See ESCAUTCHEON.
And thereto had the that seavcheon of her desires, supported by certain badly diligent ministers. Sidney.
Your seavcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Honour is a meer seavcheon. Shakesp. Henry IV.
The chiefs about their necks the seavcheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.
SEAVELLATED. adj. [from seavell, Lat.] Divided into small surfaces.
It seems part of the seavellated bone of a surgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution. Woodward.
SEAVIFORM. adj. [from seaviformis, Latin.] Shaped like a shield.
SEAVTLE. n. f. [from seavella, Latin; seavell, Celt. Alfsw.]
1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter which it resembles in form.
A seavtle or seavtin to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.
The earth and stones they are fain to carry from under their feet in seavtles and baskets. Hakewill on Providence.
2. A small grate.
To the hole in the door have a small seavtle, to keep in what mice are there. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. [From seav.] A quick pace; a short run; a pace of affected precipitation.
She went with an easy seavtle out of the shop. Speator.
To SEAVTLE. v. n. [from seav or seavdle.] To run with affected precipitation.
The old fellow seavtled out of the room. Arbutnot.
To SEAVIGN. v. a. [from seavign, Ital. Milton, for disdain.]
Lifted up to high,
I seavign'd subjection. Milton.
SEAVIGNFUL. adj. Contracted for disdainful.
They now, put up with seavignful insolence,
Despite the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.
SEA. n. f. [from see, Saxon; see, or zee, Dutch.]
1. The ocean; the water opposed to the land.
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The rivers run into the sea. Cornew.
He made the sea, and all that is therein. Ex. xx. 11.
So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air,
So working sea settle and purge the wine,
Amphibious between sea and land
The river horle. Milton.
Some

SEA

Some leviathan,
Haply flumbring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea.
Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land.
They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail.
Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore.
But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest, and the rising waves,
Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid side
Wash off the sea weeds, and the founding tides.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world.
So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main.
A collection of water; a lake.
Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren.
3. Proverbially for any large quantity.
That sea of blood which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal misery and misery
the malicious author and instigator of its effusion.
Any thing rough and tempestuous.
To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
And in a troubled sea of passion tost.
The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half sea-sick before the bonfire was out.
SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.
SEABEAT. [sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.
The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
That once-sea-beat will to sea again.
Darkness cover'd o'er
The face of things: along the seaboard there Sate we slept.
SEABOAT. n. f. [sea and boat.] Vessel capable to bear the
sea.
Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad sea-boats, and themselves but indifferent seamen.
SEABORN. adj. [sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.
Like Neptune and his fish-born nieces, shall be
The shining glories of the land and sea.
All these in order march, and marching sing
The warlike actions of their fish-born king.
SEABOY. n. f. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.
Can't thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king?
SEABREACH. n. f. [sea and reach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.
To an impetuous woman, tempests and seabreaches are nothing.
SEABREEZE. n. f. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the
sea.
Hedges, in moist places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grafs from the seabreeze.
SEABUILD. adj. [sea and build.] Built for the sea.
Borne each by other in a distant line,
The fishbuilt forts in dreadful order move.
SEACABBAGE. n. f. [cabbage, Latin.] Seacolewort. A plant.
It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage.
SEAHOLLY. n. f. [cryngium, Latin.] A plant.
The species are, sea-holly, or cryngo. Common cryngo, &c. The roots of the first are candied, and sent to London for medicinal use, being the true cryngo.
SEACALF. n. f. [sea and calf.] The seal.
The sea-calf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf: his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and multachies like those of a cat: his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other viviparous fishes.
SEACAP. n. f. [sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.
I know your favour well,
Though now you have no seacap on your head.
SEACHART. n. f. [sea and chart.] Map on which only the coasts are delineated.

SEA

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description.
SEACOAL. n. f. [sea and coal.] Coal, so called not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pit-coal.
We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacoal fire.
Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal.
This pulmonique indispotion of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacoal is burnt.
SEACOAPE. n. f. [sea and cape.] Shore; edge of the sea.
The venturous mariner that way,
Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay;
For safety's sake that time his seacape made,
And nam'd it Albion.
Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land, that would pay well for the taking in.
SEACOMPASS. n. f. [sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.
The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north-point only, with moveor immotus, notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only.
SEACOW. n. f. [sea and cow.] The manatee.
The seacow is a very bulky animal, of the cetaceous kind.
It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference: its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrick: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures in the place of them; yet its sense of hearing is very quick. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tufts hanging out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards first called it ma-natee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. This creature lives principally about the mouths of the large rivers in Africa, the East Indies, and America, and feeds upon vegetables. Its flesh is white like veal, and very well tasted. The lapis manati, which is of a fine clean white colour, and bony texture, is properly the os petrolium of this animal. This stone has been supposed to be a powerful amulet, but is now neglected.
SEADOG. n. f. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.
Fierce seadogs devour the mang'd friends.
When, flung with hunger, the embroils the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food.
SEAFARER. n. f. [sea and fare.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.
They stily refused to vail their bonnets by the summons of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers.
A wandring merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Studious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd;
But dreads th' athletic labours of the field.
SEAFARING. adj. [sea and fare.] Travelling by sea.
My wife fasten'd him unto a small spare mallet
Such as seafaring men provide for storms.
It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed.
SEAFIGHT. n. f. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.
Seafights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battles.
They were full of drink at the time of their seafights.
If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a seafight.
This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, wherewith they lost ninety-three in a seafight.
SEAFOWL. n. f. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.
The bills of curlews, and many other seafowls, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms.
A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the seas.
A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er-fly.
SEAGIRT. adj. [sea and girt.] Girded or incircled by the
sea.
Neptune, besides the fway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in by lot, 'twixt high and nether Jove,
Imperial rule of all the seagirt isles.
Telemachus, the blooming heir
Of seagirt Ithaca, demands my care:
'Tis mine to form his green unpractis'd years
In sage debates.
SEAGULL. n. f. [sea and gull.] A water fowl.
The seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, forebode rain and wind.
Bittern.

SEA

Bittern, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish.
SEAGREEN. adj. [sea and green.] Resembling the colour of the distant sea; cerulean.
White, red, yellow, blue, with their several mixtures, as green, scarlet, purple, and seagreen, come in only by the eyes.
Upon his urn reclin'd,
His seagreen mantle waving in the wind,
The god appear'd.
SEAGREEN. n. f. Saxifrage. A plant.
SEAGULL. n. f. A sea bird.
SEAHEDGE. n. f. [sea, hedge, and leg.] A kind of sea shell-fish.
The seahedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and pinched, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin.
SEAHOG. n. f. [sea and hog.] The porpus.
SEAHOLM. n. f. [sea and holm.]
1. A small uninhabited island.
2. Seaholly. A kind of sea weed.
Cornwall bringeth forth greater store of seaholm and fam-phire than any other county.
SEAHORSE. n. f. [sea and horse.]
1. The seahorse is a fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see it dried, is a deep reddish brown; and its tail is turned round under the belly. It is found about the Mediterranean, and has been celebrated for medicinal virtues; but is at present wholly neglected.
2. The morse.
Part of a large tooth, round and tapering: a tuft of the morie, or walrus, called by some the seahorse.
3. The medical and poetical seahorse seem very different. By the seahorse Dryden means probably the hippopotamus.
By 'em
Seahorses, flound'ring in the slimy mud, Tost'd up their heads, and dash'd the ooze about 'em. Dry.
SEAMAID. n. f. [sea and maid.] Mermaid.
Certain stars shot from their spheres,
To hear the seamaids' musick.
SEAMAN. n. f. [sea and man.]
1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.
She, looking out,
Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout.
Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellespont.
The whole poem was first written, and now sent you from a place where I have not so much as the converse of any seaman.
Æneas order'd
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's caution, and a seaman's ear;
Thus was his friend interr'd.
By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful.
Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet and the most seamen of any state in Europe.
2. Mermaid; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and intrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids, or seamen.
SEAMARK. n. f. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.
Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay,
Threatning unheedy wreck and rash decay,
For safety's sake his seacape made,
And nam'd it Albion.
Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seacape of my utmost sail.
They were executed at divers places upon the seacoast, for seamarks or lighthouses, to teach Perkins's people to avoid the coast.
They are remembered with a brand of infamy fixt upon them, and set as seamarks for those who observe them to avoid.
The fault of others sway,
He set as seamarks for himself to shun.
SEAMEW. n. f. [sea and mew.] A fowl that frequents the
sea.
An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcs, and seamew's clang.
The chough, the seamew, the loquacious crow, Scram aloft.
SEAMONSTER. n. f. [sea and monster.] Strange animal of the sea.

SEA

Seamasters give suck to their young.
Where luxury once reign'd, seamasters whelp.
SEANYMPH. n. f. [sea and nymph.] Goddess of the sea.
Virgil, after Homer's example, gives us a transformation of Æneas's ship into seamymphe.
SEANION. n. f. An herb.
SEAOOSE. n. f. [sea and oose.] The mud in the sea or shore.
All seaoose, or oozy mud, and the mud of rivers, are of great advantage to all sorts of land.
SEAPIECE. n. f. [sea and piece.] A picture representing any thing at sea.
Great painters often employ their pencils upon seapièces.
SEAROLL. n. f. [sea and pool.] A lake of salt water.
I have often heard it wished, that all that land were a sea-pool.
SEAPORT. n. f. [sea and port.] A harbour.
SEARISQUE. n. f. [sea and risque.] Hazard at sea.
He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charged himself with all the searisque of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in the Winter.
SEAROCKET. n. f. A plant.
SEAROOM. n. f. [sea and room.] Open sea; spacious main.
There is searoom enough for both nations, without offending one another, and it would exceedingly support the navy.
The bigger whale like some huge carrack lay,
Which wanteth searoom with her foes to play.
SEAROVER. n. f. [sea and rove.] A pirate.
SEASHARK. n. f. [sea and shark.] A ravenous seafish.
Witches mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt seashark.
SEASHELL. n. f. [sea and shell.] Shells found on the shore.
Seashells are great improvers of four or cold land.
SEASHORE. n. f. [sea and shore.] The coast of the sea.
That seashore where no more world is found,
But foaming billows breaking on the ground.
Fournier gives an account of an earthquake in Peru, that reached three hundred leagues along the seashore.
To say a man has a clear idea of any quantity, without knowing how great it is, is as reasonable as to say he has the positive idea of the number of the sands on the seashore.
SEASICK. adj. [sea and sick.] Sick, as new voyagers on the
sea.
She began to be much seasick, extremity of weather continuing.
Barbarossa was not able to come on shore, for that he was,
as they said, seasick, and troubled with an ague.
In love's voyage nothing can offend;
Women are never seasick.
Wearry and seasick, when in thee confin'd;
Now, for thy safety, cares distract my mind.
SEASIDE. n. f. [sea and side.] The edge of the sea.
Their camels were without number, as the sand by the seaside.
There disembarking on the green seafide,
We land our cattle, and the spoil divide.
SEASERPENT. n. f. [sea and serpent.] Serpent generated in the water.
SEASERVICE. n. f. [sea and service.] Naval war.
You were press'd for the seafervice, and got off with much ado.
SEASURGEON. n. f. [sea and surgeon.] A chirurgeon employed on shipboard.
My design was to help the seafurgeon.
SEASURROUNDED. adj. [sea and surrounded.] Encircled by the
sea.
To seafurrounded realms the gods assign Small tract of fertile lawn, the least to mine.
SEATERM. n. f. [sea and term.] Word of art used by the seamen.
I agree with you in your censure of the seaterms in Dryden's Virgil, because no terms of art, or cant words, suit the majesty of epic poetry.
SEAWATER. n. f. [sea and water.] The salt water of the
sea.
By digging of pits in the seashore, he did frustrate the laborious works of the enemies, which had turned the seawater upon the wells of Alexandria.
I took off the dressings, and bathed the member with seawater.
Seawater has many gross, rough, and catthy particles in it, as appears from its saltness; whereas fresh water is more pure and unmixt.
SEAL. n. f. [seal, yeke, Saxon; seel, Danish.] The seacalf.
The seal or foyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a moldwarp: he delighteth in musick, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to show himself above water: they also come on land.

SEA

- An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and orcs, and seamaws clang. Milton.
- SEAL. n. f. [igel, Saxon; sigillum, Latin.]
1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.
The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If the organs of perception, like wax overharden with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal; or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it; or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.
The same
His grandfate wore about his neck
In three seal rings, which after, melted down, Form'd a vault buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
2. The impression made in wax.
Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond, Shaksp.
Solyman shewed him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal. Knight.
He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter. Arb.
3. Any act of confirmation.
They their fill of love
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.
To SEAL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a seal.
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me;
And by him seal up thy mind. Shaksp. As you like it.
I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, and afterwards seal it. Shaksp. Lear.
2. To confirm or attest by a seal.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall fall them both. Shaksp. Romeo.
3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.
My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love. Shaksp. R. III.
When I have performed this, and seal'd to them this fruit,
I will come into Spain. Rom. xv. 28.
4. To shut; to close.
Seal up your lips, and give no words, but mum! Shaksp. At my death.
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation. Shaksp. Henry IV.
The root of evil is seal'd up from you. 2 Esdr. viii. 53.
The sense is like the sun; for the sun seals up the globe of heaven, and opens the globe of earth: so the sense doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things. Bacon.
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
The facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.
5. To mark with a stamp.
You'd rail upon the hostess,
And say you would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shaksp. To SEAL. v. n.
To fix a seal.
I will seal unto this bond. Shaksp. Lear.
We make a sure covenant and write it, and our princes and priests seal unto it. Neb. ix. 38.
SEALER. n. f. [from seal.] One that seals.
SEALINGWAX. n. f. [seal and wax.] Hard wax made of rosin used to seal letters.
The prominent orifice was closed with sealingwax. Boyle.
SEAM. n. f. [ream, Saxon; zoom, Dutch.]
1. The edge of cloth where the threads are doubled; the future where the two edges are sewed together.
In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
The seams with sparkling emeralds set around. Dryden.
Precepts should be so finely wrought together in the same piece, that no coarse seam may discover where they join. Add.
2. The juncture of planks in a ship.
With boiling pitch the seams intops,
Which, well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand. Dryd.
3. A cicatrix; a scar.
4. [ream, Saxon, a load.] A measure; a vessel in which things are held; eight bushels of corn. Alphonsus.
5. [seme, Saxon; sain, Welsh; sain, French.] Tallow; grease; hog's lard.
Shall the proud lord,
That busies his arrogance with his own seam,
Be worshipp'd? Shaksp. Titus and Creffida.
Part scour the rusty shields with seams, and part
New grind the blunted ax. Dryden's En.
To SEAM. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To join together, by future, or otherwise.
2. To mark; to scar with a long cicatrix.
Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own fabre gave. Pope.

Sunk down her nose, or seam'd her face? Swift.

SEA

- SEAMLESS. adj. [from seam.] Having no seam.
SEAMMENT. n. f. [seam and rent.] A separation of anything where it is joined; a breach of the stitches.
SEAMSTRESS. n. f. [seamstress, Saxon.] A woman whose trade is to sew.
They wanted food and raiment; so they took Religion for their seamstress and their cook. Cromwell.
SEAMY. adj. [from seam.] Having a seam; shewing the seam.
Some such figure he was,
That turn'd your wit the seamy side without,
And made me to suspect you. Shaksp. Othello.
SEAN. n. f. [regne, Saxon; seana, Latin.] A net. Sometimes written seine, or saine.
SEAR. adj. [seapan, Saxon, to dry.] Dry; not any longer green. Spenser uses it.
I have liv'd long enough: my May of life
Is fall'n into the fear, the yellow leaf. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear. Milton.
Some may be cheris'd in dry places, as in far wood. R.
To SEAR. v. a. [seapan, Saxon.] To burn; to cauterize.
The scorching flame fore sing'd all his face,
And through his armour all his body fear'd. Dryden.

Cherish veins of good humour, and sear up those of ill. Tem.
I'm sear'd with burning steel, till the scorch'd marrow Fries in the bones. Romeo's Royal Council.
SEAR-BREACH. n. f. [sear and breach.] Perhaps sear and breach. 'Tis one thing for a man to be firm against honest dangers;
but to run his head against stone walls, or to put his shoulders to a sear-breach, to attempt insuperable difficulties, would be just the moral of the ram in the fable. L'Estrange.
SEAR-CLOATH. n. f. [searclath, Saxon, from sear, pain, and clath, a plaster; so that searclath, as it is now written, from sear, wax, seems to be wrong.] A plaster; a large plaster.
Bees wax is the ground of all searclath salves. Mortimer.
To SEARCE. v. a. [searce, French.] To sift finely.
Put the finely searced powder of alabaster into a flat-your tents in? Deutr. i. 33.

They may sometimes be successful to searce out truth. Watts.
To SEARCH. v. n.
1. To make a search.
Satisfy me once more; once more searce with me. Shaksp. Milton.
To ask or searce I blame thee not.
2. To make inquiry.
Those who seriously searce after or maintain truth, should study to deliver themselves without obscurity or equivocation.
It suffices that they have once with care sifted the matters, and searched into all the particulars that could give any light to the question. Locke.
With piercing eye some searce where nature plays,
And trace the wayton through her darksome maze. Titch.
3. To seek; to try to find.
Your husband's coming, woman, to searce for a gentleman that is here now in the house. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
We in vain searce for that constitution within a fly, upon which depend those powers we observe in them. Locke.
SEARCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Inquiry by looking into every suspected place.
The orb he roam'd
With narrow searce, and with inspection deep. Mil. n. Inquiry.

SEA

2. Inquiry; examination; act of seeking.
His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the searce. Shaksp. Lear.
Who great in searce of God and nature grow,
They best the wife Creator's praise declare. Dryden.
Now mourn thy fatal searce;
It is not safe to have too quick a sense. Dryden.
The mind sets itself on work in searce of some hidden idea, and turns the eye of the soul upon it. Locke.
By the philosophical use of words, I mean such an use as conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may be satisfied with in its searce after knowledge. Locke.
The parents, after a long searce for the boy, gave him for drowned in a canal. Addison.
This common practice carries the heart aside from all that is honest in our searce after truth. Watts.
3. Quest; pursuit.
If zealous love should go in searce of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch? Shaksp.
Stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own searce, and altogether against my will. Shaksp. As you like it.
Nor did my searce of liberty begin,
Till my black hairs were chang'd upon my chin. Dryden.
SEARCHER. n. f. [from searce.]
1. Examiner; inquirer; trier.
The Agarenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the authors of fables, and searchers out of understanding. Bar. iii. 23.
The searchers found a marvellous difference between the Anakins and themselves. Raleigh.
Religion has given us a more just idea of the divine nature:
he whom we appeal to is truth itself, the great searcher of hearts, who will not let fraud go unpunished, or hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Addison.
In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes
To what our Maker to their ken denies:
The searcher follows fast; the object flies. Prior.
Avoid the man who practises any thing unbecoming a free and open searcher after truth. Watts.
2. Officer in London appointed to examine the bodies of the dead, and report the cause of death.
The searchers, who are ancient matrons sworn to their office, repair to the place where the dead corpses lie, and by view of the same, and by other inquiries, examine by what disease the corps died. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
SEASON. n. f. [saison, French.]
1. One of the four parts of the year, Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter.
The fairest flowers of th' season
Are our carnations and streak'd thistleflowers. Shaksp.
Then Summer, Autumn, Winter did appear;
And Spring was but a season of the year. Dryden.
We saw, in six days travelling, the several seasons of the year in their beauty. Addison on Italy.
2. A time as distinguished from others.
He's noble, wife, judicious, and best knows
The fits of th' season. Shaksp. Macbeth.
The season prime for sweetest scents and airs. Milton.
3. A fit time; an opportune concurrence.
At season fit let her with thee partake. Milton.
All business should be done betimes; and there's as little trouble of doing it in season too, as out of season. L'Estrange.
For active sports, for pleasing rest,
This is the time to be possess'd;
The best is but in season best. Dryden.
I would indulge the gladness of my heart!
Let us retire: her grief is out of season. Philips.
There is no season to which such thoughts as these are more suitable. Atterbury.
The season when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know. Pope.
4. A time not very long.
We'll slip you for a season, but our jealousy Do's yet depend. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
5. [From the verb.] That which gives a high relish.
You lack the season of all natures, sleep. Shaksp. Macbeth.
To SEASON. v. a. [saisonner, French.]
1. To mix with food any thing that gives a high relish.
Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt. Lev. ii. 13.
They seasoned every sacrifice, whereof a greater part was eaten by the priests. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
For breakfast and supper, milk and milk-pottage are very fit for children; only let them be seasoned with sugar. Locke.
The wife contriver,
To keep the waters from corruption free,
Mixt them with salt, and season'd all the sea. Blackmore.
2. To give a relish to.
Season still with sports your serious hours;
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours. Dryden.
The proper use of wit is to season conversation, to represent

SEA

- what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men. Tillotson.
3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.
Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly pow'r does then shew likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
Season your admiration but a while,
With an attentive ear, till I deliver This marvel to you. Shaksp. Hamlet.
4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.
Whatever thing
The scythe of time mows down, devour unpard'd,
Till I, in man residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey. Milton's Pa. Lost.
Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles. Taylor.
Sin, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons: the touch and tincture go together. South.
5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.
The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren:
How many things by season season'd are,
To their right praise and true perfection. Shaksp. Lear.
Who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy. Shaksp. Lear.
We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself unto a power tyrannical. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
The archers of his guard shot two arrows every man together against an inch board of well season'd timber. Hayward.
His plentiful stores do season'd timber send;
Thither the bravest carpenters repair. Dryden.
A man should harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold wherein he lives. Addison.
To SEASON. v. n. To be mature; to grow fit for any purpose.
Carpenters rough plane boards for flooring, that they may set them by to season. Moxon's Mach. Exort.
SEASONABLE. adj. [saison, French.] Opportune; happening or done at a proper time; proper as to time.
Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought. Eccles. v. 2.
If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the despised abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reformed into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened. South's Sermons.
SEASONABLENESS. n. f. [from seasonable.] Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.
A British freeholder would very ill discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and seasonableness of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions. Addison's Freeholder.
SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.] Properly with respect to time.
This is that to which I would most earnestly, most seasonably advise you all. Spratt's Sermon.
SEASONER. n. f. [from To season.] He who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.
SEASONING. n. f. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.
Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish so as divers do live of them alone. Bacon.
Some abound with words, without any seasoning or taste of matter. Ben. Johnson.
A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste
the blessing. Dryden.
Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the publick without frequent seasonings. Addison's Freeholder.
The publick accept a paper which has in it none of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us. Addison's Spectator.
Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatick oil; as thyme and fennel. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
SEAT. n. f. [sedes, Latin; setz, old German. Skinner.]
1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.
The sons of light
Hasted, resorting to the fummons high,
And took their seats. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The lady of the leaf ordain'd a seat,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryd.
2. Chair

SEC

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.
With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply Thy latest words. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Thus we debate
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears. Shak. Coriolanus.
Whoever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil. Hakewill on Providence.
3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.
It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them. Raleigh.
O earth, how like to heav'n! if not prefer'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old!
In Alba he shall fix his royal seat; Milton.
And, born a king, a race of kings beget.
Has Winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat,
And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat? Dryden.
The promis'd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain. Prior.
4. Situation; site.
The fittest and the easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war,
The rather for their seat, being next borderers
On Italy. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, committeth himself to prison. Bacon.
A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops houses, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building. Hayward.
It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted. Raleigh.
To SEAT, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To place on seats; to cause to sit down.
The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate. Arbutnot.
2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.
Thus high was king Richard seated. Shak. R. III.
Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcázar, such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories to infringe
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings. Milton.
A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection. Pope.
3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.
Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the fourteen undiscovered continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guiana. Raleigh.
By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own. Wotton.
4. To fix; to place firm.
Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature. Shak. Macbeth.
From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills. Milton.
SE'AWARD, adv. [from and seaward, Saxon.] Towards the sea.
The rock rush'd seaward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to th' abyss the boaster bore. Pope.
SE'CANT, n. f. [from secans, Latin; secans, Fr.] In geometry, the right line drawn from the centre of a circle, cutting and meeting with another line called the tangent without it. Diér.
To SECE'DE, v. n. [from secede, Latin.] To withdraw from fellowship in any affair.
SECE'DER, n. f. [from secede.] One who discovers his disapprobation of any proceedings by withdrawing himself.
To SECE'RN, v. a. [from seerno, Latin.] To separate finer from grosser matter; to make the separation of substances in the body.
Birds are commonly better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more finely, and secerne more subtilly.
Bacon's Natural History.
The pituite or mucus secerne in the nose and windpipe, is not an excrementitious but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts, from which it is secerne'd, from excoriations. Arbutnot.
SECE'SSION, n. f. [from secessio, Latin.]
1. The act of departing.
The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown.
2. The act of withdrawing from councils or actions.

SEC

- SE'CLE, n. f. [from seculum, French; seculum, Latin.] A century.
Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's life-time, and part after his son's birth; and thereupon it is wont to be said that three generations make one seculum, or hundred years in the genealogies. Hammond's Præd. Catech.
To SECL'UDE, v. a. [from secludo, Latin.] To confine from;
to shut up apart; to exclude.
None is seclud'd from that function of any degree, state, or calling.
Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us, to fence them not only, as he did the interdicted tree, by precept and commination, but with difficulties and impossibi-lities. Decay of Unity.
The number of birds described may be near five hundred, and the number of fishes, secluding shell-fish, as many; but if the shell-fish be taken in, more than six times the number.
Incuse your tender plants in your conservatory, secluding all entrance of cold. Everlyn's Calendar.
Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.
SE'COND, n. f. [from secundus, French; secundus, Latin.] It is ob-servable that the English have no ordinal of two, as the Latins and the nations deriving from them have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequi, the Saxons term oþer, or æfterea.
1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.
Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.
2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.
I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
None I know
Second to me, or like; equal much less.
My eyes are full the same; each glance, each grace,
Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.
Not these huge bolts, by which the giants slain,
Lay overthrown on the Phlegrean plain;
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Addison.
By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.
SE'COND-HAND, n. f. Possession received from the first possessor.
SE'COND-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original;
not primary.
Some men build so much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or implicit knowledge. Locke.
They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gop.
At SE'COND-HAND, in imitation; in the second place of order;
by transmission; not primarily; not originally.
They pelted them with sayings and epigrams, which perhaps had been taken up at first only to make their court, and at second-hand to flatter those who had flattered their king. Temple.
In imitation of preachers at second-hand, I shall transcribe from Bruyere a piece of railery. Tatler.
Spurious virtue in a maid;
A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.
SE'COND, n. f. [from secundus, French; from the adjective.]
1. One who accompanies another in a duel to direct or defend him.
Their seconds minister an oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magick them suppli'd;
And fought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their cautes tried. Drayton's Nymphs.
Their first encounters were very furious, 'till after some cool and bloodied they were parted by the seconds. Addison.
Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watts.
2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.
He propounded the duke as a main cause of divers inimi-ties in the state, being sure enough of seconds after the first onset. Watts.
Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disadvantage to a character. Celcius.
3. A second minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.
Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames at alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or moist thirty seconds. Philips's Mech. Music.
Sounds

SEC

- Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.
To SE'COND, v. a. [from secundo, Fr. secundo, Lat. from the noun.]
1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.
The authors of the former opinion were presently seclud'd by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they fought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hosker.
Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shak. Henry VI.
I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offring to combat thee his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seclud'd. Milton.
Familiar Ovid tender thoughts infuses,
And nature second all his soft desires. Rowe's Annals.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and no body second you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste;
but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.
In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use. Pope.
2. To follow in the next place.
You some permit
To second ill with ill. Shakspere.
Having formerly discour'd of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Raleigh.
He saw his gulfed act
By Eve, though all unwitting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sin is usually seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself.
SE'COND SIGHT, n. f. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: suppos'd inherent in some of the Scottish illanders.
As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was fitted with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before. Addison's Freeholder.
SE'COND SIGHT, adj. [from second sight.] Having the second sight.
Sawney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second sighted, and his mother but narrowly escap'd from a witch. Add.
SE'CONDARILY, adv. [from secundary.] In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; not originally; not in the first intention.
These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel them secondarily to a sloping motion.
He confesses that temples are erected, and festivals kept, to the honour of saints, at least secondarily. Stillington.
It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancolick blood, or secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or oedematick tumour. Harvey.
SE'CONDARINESS, n. f. [from secundary.] The state of being secondary.
That which is peculiar and discriminative, must be taken from the primariness and secundariness of the perception. Narr.
SE'CONDARY, adj. [from secundarius, Latin.]
1. Not primary; not of the first intention; not of the first rate; next to the first.
Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon's Natural History.
Wherefore there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estrange.
Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together the magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth North over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real cause to the secondary. Bentley.
If the system had been fortuitously formed by the convening matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets, both primary and secondary, should revolve the same way from the West to the East, and that in the same plane? Bentl.
2. Acting by transmission or deputation.
That we were form'd then, say'st thou? and the work
Of secondary hands, by talk transfer'd
From father to his son? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary power
From that which simply points the hour.

SEC

3. A secondary fever is that which arises after a crisis, or the discharge of some morbid matter, as after the declension of the small pox or measles. Quincy.
SE'CONDARY, n. f. [from the adjective.] A delegate; a deputy.
SE'CONDLY, adv. [from second.] In the second place.
First the hath disobeyed the law, and secondly trespassed against her husband. Ecclus. xxiii. 23.
First, metals are more durable than plants; and secondly,
they are more solid and hard. Bacon.
The house of commons in Ireland, and, secondly, the privy council, address'd his majesty against these half-pence. Swift.

1. The second order in dignity or value.
They call it thunder of the secondrate. Addison's Ovid.
2. It is sometimes used adjectively, one of the second order. A colloquial license.
He was not then a secondrate champion, as they would have him, who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero. Dryden.
SE'CRECY, n. f. [from secretus, Latin.]
1. Privacy; state of being hidden.
That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shak. Henry VI.
The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shaksp. H. VIII.
In nature's book of infinite secrecy,
A little can I read. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
2. Solitude; retirement.
Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompany'd, seek'st not Social communication. Milton's Parad. Lost.
There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South's Sermons.
3. Forbearance of discovery.
It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that being the publick act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.
4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.
SE'CRET, adj. [from secretus, French; secretus, Latin.]
1. Kept hidden; not revealed; concealed; private.
The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us. Deutr. xxix. 29.
2. Retired; private; unseen.
Thou open'st wisdom's way,
And giv'st access, though secret the retire:
And I perhaps am secret. Milton.
3. Faithful to a secret entrusted.
Secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not alter?
4. Unknown; not discovered: as, a secret remedy.
5. Privy; obscene.

 In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Wotton.
 2. A part divided from the rest.
 3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.
 Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hobbes.
 The production of volatile salts I reserve 'till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
 Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.
SECTOR. n. f. [secteur, French.] In geometry, Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle, bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.

SECULAR. adj. [secularis, Latin; seculier, French.]
 1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.
 This in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral; in publick and politick secular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hobbes.
 Then shall they seek 't' avail themselves of names,
 Places, and titles; and with these to join Secular pow'r, though feigning still to act
 By spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastic rules.
 Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby ease to the clergy both secular and regular.
 In France vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.

 In my small pinnacle I can sail. Dryden's Horace.
 To SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.
 Nothing left
 That might his happy state secure,
 Secure from outward force. Milton.
 I spread a cloud before the victor's sight, Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secure his flight;
 Ev'n then secure him, when I fought with joy
 The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.
 Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.
 Truth

SED

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.
 That prince who shall be so wise as by established laws of liberty to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.
 Deeper to wound, the shuns the fight;
 She drops her arms to gain the field:
Secures her conquest by her flight,
 And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.
 Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Brome.
 2. To protect; to make safe.
 Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.
 3. To insure.
 4. To make fast.
SECURELY. adv. [from secure.] Without fear; carelessly; without danger; safely.
 Love, that had now long time securely slept
 In Venus' lap, unarmed then and naked,
 'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being waked. Spenser.
 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
 A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
 The knight oppos'd. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
 His daring foe securely him defy'd.
 A foul that can securely death defy,
 And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden's Juven.
 We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
 And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
 From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
 And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.
 Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent, I securely leave to the judgment of the reader. Atterbury.
SECUREMENT. n. f. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.
 They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securment from it. Brown.
SECURITY. n. f. [securitas, Fr. securitas, Lat. from secure.]
 1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
 Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.
 2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
 There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but securit enough to make fellowships accurst. Shakespeare.
 How senseless then, and dead a soul hath he,
 Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
 That he might sin with more security. Davies.
 3. Protection; defence.
 If the providence of God be taken away, what securit have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.
 4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing.
 When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts xvii 9.
 It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable securit that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.
 Exchange bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift's Examiner.
 The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credits, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot on Coins.
 5. Safety; certainty.
 Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.
SEDAN. n. f. [from sedes, Latin.] A kind of portable coach;
 Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
 Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
 And for their wives produce an empty chair.
 By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament and sedan, exceeding 12 s. l. i. s. 10 d. half-penny, should pay 30 s. in the hundred pound value. Arbutnot.

SEDENTARINESS. n. f. [from sedentary.] The state of being sedentary; inactivity.
SEDENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, French; sedentarius, Italian; sedentarius, from sedes, Latin.]
 1. Palsed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.
 A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant. Harvey on Consumptions.
 The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbutnot.
 2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.
 The sedentary earth,
 That better might with far less compass move,
 Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion. Milton.
 'Till length of years
 And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
 To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton's Agonistes.
 The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions. Addison's Spectator.
SEDGE. n. f. [græc, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.
 'T'one layeth for turf and for sedge. Tusser.
 The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
 Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
 But when his fair course is not hindered,
 He makes sweet music with th' enamel'd stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
 He overtakes in his pilgrimage;
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakespeare.
 Adonis, painted by a running brook,
 And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
 Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
 Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shakespeare.
 In hotter countries a fly called lucciola, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.
 He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.
 My bonds I brake,
 Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
 Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.
 Niphates, with inverted urn,
 And drooping sedges, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.
SEDEY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.
 On the gentle Severn's sed, bank,
 In single opposition, hand to hand,
 He did confront the best part of an hour,
 In changing argument with great Glendower. Shak. H. IV.
 Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
 But fear'd the fate of Simoes would return:
 Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,
 And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.
SEDIMENT. n. f. [sediment, French; sedimentum, Lat.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.
 The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Bacon's Nat. History.
 It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. Saunders's Sermons.
 That matter sunk not down 'till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. H. outwards.
SEDITION. n. f. [sedition, Fr. sedition, Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.
 That sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
 That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
 And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shak. H. VI.
 In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,
 The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak. Coriolanus.
SEDITIONARY. adj. [seditionarius, Fr. seditionarius, Latin.] Factious with tumult; turbulent.
 The cause, why I have brought this army hither,
 Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace and to the state. Shakespeare H. VI.
 Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this sedition behaviour. Clarendon.
 Thou return'st
 From flight, sedition angel.
 But if he has deform'd this earthly life
 With murderous rapine and sedition strife,
 In everlasting darkness must he lie;
 Still more unhappy that he cannot die. Prior.
SEDITIONARILY. adv. [from sedition.] Tumultuously; with factious turbulence.
SEDITIONARINESS. n. f. [from sedition.] Turbulence; disposition to sedition.

SED

To SEDUCE. v. a. [seduco, Latin; seduire, French.] To draw aside from the right; to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

His meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shakef. Jul. Cæs.
Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakef. H. V.
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakef. R. III.
In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Tim. iv. 1.
I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any finer thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton.
Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Johnson's hostile name;
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise. Dryden.

SEDUCEMENT. n. f. [seductio, Latin.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.
To seduce them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seducement or vain principle seize them wandering, some early and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton on Education.
Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's seducements, and the magic bow'r. Pope.
SEDUCER. n. f. [seducer, Latin.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter; a corrupter.
Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone. Shakef. Macbeth.
There is a teaching by refraining seducers, and to removing the hindrances of knowledge. Saunders.
The soft seducer, with enticing looks,
The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes. Dryden.
He whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

SEDUCIBLE. adj. [seducibilis, Latin.] Corruptible; capable of being drawn aside.
The vicious example of ages past poisons the curiosity of these present, affording a hint of sin unto seducible spirits.
We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our easy seducible understandings. Glavin.
SEDUCTION. n. f. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Latin.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.
Whoever mens faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, were sure to bring judgments. Hammond.
To procure the miseries of others in those extremities, wherein we hold an hope to have no society ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Whereby is evident the easy seduction of men, neither inquiring into the verity of the substance, nor reforming upon repugnance of circumstances.
The deceiver soon found out this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glavin. Scyth.
Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.
A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise, but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Clarissa.

SEDUCTIVE. n. f. [seductiva, Latin.] Diligent assiduity; labori-ousness; industry; application; intenseness of endeavour.
Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooker.
Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry in mens enquiries into it. Saunders.
SEDULOUS. adj. [sedulus, Latin.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent; painful.
Not sedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
What signifies the found of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end. L'Estrange.
The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthaea reach'd her teat, distant
With milk, thy early food: the redoubt bee Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.
The bare majority of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SEE

SEDULOUSLY. adv. [sedulus, Latin.] Assiduously; industri-ously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.
The ritual, preceptive, prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.
All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy rock, no way or rule
Be unessay'd. Philips.

SEDULOUSNESS. n. f. [sedulus, Latin.] Assiduity; assiduous-ness; industry; diligence.
SEE. n. f. [seer, Latin.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocess of a bishop.
You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill transmute your grace,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shakef. H. IV.
It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms;
and for themselves, if they be wise. Lea.
The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see. Adams.
Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

To SEE. v. a. preter. I saw; part. pass. seen. [reos, Saxon; sen, Dutch.]
1. To perceive by the eye.
Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again. Shakef. King Lear.
I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it. Jf. xxi. 3.
I speak that which I have seen with my father, and ye do that which you have seen with yours. Jf. viii. 36.
He'll lead the life of gods, and be
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see. Dryden.
It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.
I see her sober over a sampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.
Seven other kine came up, lean fleshed, such as I never saw for badness. Gen. xli. 19.
Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy. Milton.
Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther. Locke.
The thunderbolt we see used by the greatest poet of Augus-tus's age, to express irresistible force in battle. Adams.
3. To discover; to detect.
Who is so gross
As cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold but says he sees it not?
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakef. Macbeth.
4. To converse with.
The main of them may be reduced to language, and to an improvement in wisdom and prudence by seeing men, and conversing with people of different tempers and customs. Locke.
5. To attend; to remark.
I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Adams's Freeholder.

To SEE. v. n.
1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.
Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not I the Lord?
Ex. iv. 11.
Air hath some secret degree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night. Bacon's Natural History.
Could you see into my secret soul,
There you might read your own dominion doubled. Dryden.
2. To discern without deception.
Many gaseous persons will find us out, will look under our mask, and see through all our fine pretensions, and discern the absurdity of telling the world that we believe one thing when we do the contrary. Tillotson.
You may see into the spirit of them all, and form your pen from those general notions. Pelton.
3. To enquire; to distinguish.
See whether fear doth make thee wrong her. Shakef.
4. To be attentive.
Mark and perform it, see'st thou; for the fall
Of any point in't shall be death. Shakef. Macbeth.
5. To scheme; to contrive.
Cassio's a proper man: let me see now;
To get his place. Shakef. Othello.

SEE.

SEE

SEE. interjection. [Originally the imperative of the verb see.]
Lo; look; observe; behold.
See, see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halifax.
See! the sole bliss heav'n could on all bestow,
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know? Pope.
See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED. n. f. [sees, Saxon; seed, Danish; saet, Dutch.]
1. The organized particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shakef. Macbeth.
Seed of a year old is the best, though some seed and grains last better than others. Bacon's Nat. History.
That every plant has its seed is an evident sign of divine providence. Adams.
Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grassleaved tribe, come up without two seed leaves; which to me is an argument that they came all of seed, there being no reason else why they should produce two seed leaves different from the subsequent. Ray.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine arises from her mother's juice:
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their seed their images convey. Prior.
In the fourth part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn. Mortimer.
2. First principle; original.
The seed of whatsoever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine. Hooker.
3. Principle of production.
Praie of great acts he fatters as a seed,
Which may the like in coming ages breed. Waller.
4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.
Next him King Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no issue male him to succeed;
But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
In all that seem'd fit for kingly seed. Fairy Queen.
The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your seed. Daniel.
When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his seed into the grant too. Locke.
5. Race; generation; birth.
Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals so excel'd;
And beauty too in such excess,
As your's, Zelinda! claims no less. Waller.

To SEED. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow to perfect maturity so as to shed the seed.
Whate'er I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seeds and runs up to poetry. Swift.
They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for seed, which they let stand to seed the next year. Mortimer.
SEEDCAKE. n. f. [seed and cake.] A sweet cake interperfed with warm aromatick seeds.
Remember, wife,
The seedcake, the pasties, and fermenty pot. Tuffer.

SEEDLING. } seed. Anyworth.
SEEDPEARL. n. f. [seed and pearl.] Small grains of pearl.
In the dissolution of seedpearl in some acid menstruum, if a good quantity of the little pearls be cast in whole, they will be carried in swarms from the bottom to the top. Boyle.
SEEDPLOT. n. f. [seed and plot.] The ground on which plants are sowed to be afterwards transplanted.
To counsel others, a man must be furnished with an universal store in himself to the knowledge of all nature: that is the matter and seed; let, there are the seeds of all argument and invention. Ben Jonson.
Humility is a seedplot of virtue, especially Christian which thrives best when 'tis deep rooted in the humble lowly heart. Hammond.
It will not be unuseful to present a full narration of this rebellion, looking back to those passages by which the seedplots were made and framed, from whence those mischiefs have successively grown. Clarendon.

SEEDTIME. n. f. [seed and time.] The season of sowing.
While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest shall not cease. Gen. viii. 22.
If he would have two tributes in one year, he must give them two seedtimes, and two harvests. Bacon.
The first rain fell upon the seedtime about Ochober, and was to make the seed to root; the latter was to fill the ear. Brown.
Their very seedtime was their harvest, and by sowing tares they immediately reaped gold. Decay of Piety.
Day and night,
Seedtime and harvest, heat and hoary frost,
Shall hold their course, 'till fire purge all things. Milton.
He that too curiously observes the face of the heavens, by missing his seedtime, will lose the hopes of his harvest. Atter.

SEE

SEEDLING. n. f. [from seed.] A young plant just risen from the seed.

Carry into the shade such seedlings or plants as are for their choiceness reserved in pots. Evelyn's Kalendar.
SEEDNESS. n. f. [from seed.] Seedtime; the time of sowing, Blossoming time
From the seedness the bare fallow brings To teeming foison. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
SEEDSMAN. n. f. [seed and man.] The sower; he that scatters the seed.

The higher Nilus swells
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
SEEDY. adj. [from seed.] Abounding with seed.
SEEDING. n. f. [from see.] Sighting; vision.
Love adds a precious seeing to the eye. Shakef. Macbeth.
SEEDING. } adv. [from see, French; from see.] It would be SEEDING that. } more grammatically written, as in French, seen that, or provided that. Since; fith; it being so that.
Why should not they be as well victualled for long time;
as the ships are usually for a year, seeing it is easier to keep victuals on land than water? Spenser on Ireland.
How shall they have any trial of his doctrine, learning, and ability to preach, seeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, because he is not yet called to the minist'ry? Whitgift.
Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of those people who have been most industrious after wisdom. Milton on Education.
Seeing they explained the phenomena of vision, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow from the surfaces of bodies, and by their subtlety penetrate any obstacle, and yet retain the exact lineaments of the several bodies from which they proceed: in consequence of this hypothesis they maintained, that we could have no phantasy of any things, but what did really subsist either intire or in its several parts. Bentley's Sermons.

To SEEK. v. a. pret. I sought; part. pass. sought. [reca, Sax. seeken, Dutch.]
1. To look for; to search for.
He did range the town to seek me out. Shakef. Macbeth.
I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shak.
Because of the money returned in our sacks, are we brought in, that he may seek occasion against us, and take us for bond-men. Gen. xliii. 18.
He seeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image. Jf. xl. 20.
Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Jf. v. 3.
The king meant not to seek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way. Clarendon.
Sweet peace, where dost thou dwell?
I humbly crave,
Let me once know;
I sought thee in a secret cave,
And ask'd if peace were there. Herbert.
So fatal 'twas to seek temptations out!
Most confidence has still most cause to doubt. Dryden.
We must seek out some other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world. Locke.

2. To solicit; to endeavour to gain.
Others tempting him, sought of him a sign. Lu. xi. 16.
The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God. Pf. civ. 21.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us, unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts. Milton.
Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.
3. To go to find.
Let us seek death, or, he not found, supply
His office. Milton.
Dardanus, though born
On Latian plains, yet sought the Phrygian shore. Dryden.
Like fury seiz'd the rest; the progress known;
All seek the mountains, and forsake the town.
Since great Ulysses sought the Phrygian plains,
Within these walls inglorious silence reigns. Pope.
Indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides on the Spartan shore. Pope.

4. To pursue by secret machinations.
I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life. Shakef.
David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life. 1 Sa. xxiii.
To SEEK. v. n.
1. To make search; to make inquiry; to endeavour.
Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read. Jf. xxxiv.

Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought for by war. Knolles
To SEEK. [An adverbial mode of speech.] At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.
Being brought and transferred from other services abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and before they have gathered experience, they shall buy it with great loss to his majesty. Spenser
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton
But they misplace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things,
As he that only can design a tree,
Would be to draw a shipwreck. Rowson
SEEKER. n. f. [from seek.] One that seeks; an inquirer.
Though I confess that in philosophy I'm a seeker, yet cannot believe that a sceptick in philosophy must be one in divinity. Glavin
A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions. Locke SEEKROW. n. f. [seek and row.] One who contrives to give himself vexation.
Afield they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seeker to, Kins, then among:
Indeed thou fiddst it was thy friend to see,
Strephon, whose absence seem'd unto thee long. Sidney
To SEEK. v. a. [seeker, to seek, French.] To close the eyes.
A term of falconry, the eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time *seek*ed or closed.
Now she brought them to see a *seek*ed dove, who the blinder
the was, the higher she frave. Sidney
As gentle hind, whose sides with cruel steel
Through lanced, her bleeding life does rain;
While the sad pang approaching the does feel,
Brays out her latest breath, and up her eyes doth seek. F. R.
Mine eyes no more on vanity shall feed,
But *seek*ed up with death shall have their deadly meed. F. R.
Come, seeking night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day. Shakespeare. Macbeth
Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy; for no man will take such parts, unless he be like the *seek*ed dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. Bacon
Since, blinded with ambition, he did fear
Like a *seek*ed dove, his crime shall be his punishment,
To be *seek*ed of fight. Dorham's Satire
To SEEK. v. n. [yllan, Saxon.] To lean on one side.

Are very ill neighbours to seek poor hop. Tusser
To SEEM. v. n. [seem, French; unless it has a Teutonic original, as seem certainly has.]
1. To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.
My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
And I dare swear, you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own. Shakespeare. H. IV.
Speak: we will not trust our eyes
Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st. Shakespeare
So spake th' Omnipotent; and with his words
All seem'd well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all. Milton
In holy nuptials ty'd;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride. Dryden
Observe the youth
Already seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden's Aen.
2. To have the appearance of truth.
It seems to me, that the true reason why we have so few versions which are tolerable, is because there are so few who have all the talents requisite for translation. Dryden
3. In Shakespeare, to seem, perhaps signifies to be beautiful.
Sir, there the stands:
If aught within that little seeming substance
May itly like your grace,
She's there, and she is your's. Shakespeare. King Lear

4. It SEEMS. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, though no reality; but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned, like the Latin semita, or the old English forsooth. Id. mib datur negotii fullet. This, it seems, is to be my task.
The earth by these, 'tis said,
This single crop of men and women bred;
Who, grown adults, to chance, it seems, enjoin'd,
Did male and female propagate. Blackmore's Cyration.
5. It is sometimes a slight affirmation.
A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistress upon a great lake. Addison's Guardian
The raven, urg'd by such impertinence, Grew passionate, it seems, and took offence. Addison
He had been a chief magistrate; and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honourably. Atterbury
It seems that when first I was discovered sleeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice. Gulliver
6. It appears to be.
Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Roderigo meant 't have sent. Shakespeare. Othello
It seems the candle's hair is taken by painters for the kin with the hair on. Brown's Vulgar Errors
SEEMER. n. f. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.
Angelo scarce confides
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be. Shakespeare SEEMING. n. f. [from seem.]
1. Appearance; show; semblance.
All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought Put on for villainy. Shakespeare. Cymbeline
Give him heedful note;
And, after, we will both our judgments join In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare. Hamlet
2. Fair appearance.
For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the Winter long. Shakespeare
3. Opinion.
Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that a new Jerusalem, being often spoken of in Scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hooker
His persuasive words impreg'd
With reason for his seeming. Milton SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show;
in semblance.
To this her mother's plot,
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor
They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton
I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Clarendon's Speech
The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part.
The king and haughty empress, to our wonder, Dryden
If not aton'd, yet seemingly at peace.
This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside. Addison's Freeholder
They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury SEEMINGNESS. n. f. [from seeming.] Plausibility; fair appearance.
The seemingness of those reasons persuades us on the other side. Digby
SEEMLINESS. n. f. [from seem.] Decency; handfomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemli-ness with portliness, and currentness with flayedness, how can the language found other than full of sweetness? Camden SEEMLY. adj. [seemly, Danish, from seem, Icelandic, honour or decency.] Decent; becoming; proper; fit.
Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemly for Christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker
I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shakespeare. H. VIII.
The wife safest and seemly by her husband stays. Milton
May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Phillips SEEMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.
There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, stood Ulysses' arms, now long diffus'd to blood. Pope
SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.
Petruchio shall offer me, disguised in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakespeare
Well seen in muck. Noble

SEER. n. f. [from see.]
1. One who sees.
We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Addison's Spectator
2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.
How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
'Till time stand fix'd? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
By day, your frighted seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And with their eyes were floods: by night from dreams
Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show
Emblems of heav'nly wrath and mystick types of woe. Pri.
SEERWOOD. n. f. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.
Caught, like dry stubble fir'd, or like searwood;
Yet from the wound ensu'd no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryden
SEESAW. n. f. [from see.] A reciprocating motion.
His wit all seesaws, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now maller up, now mis,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope
To SEESAW. v. n. [from see.] To move with a reciprocating motion.
Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbut.
To SEETH. v. a. preterite Isid or seth; part. pass. sethen.
[prosan, Saxon; seten, Dutch.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.
The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grapes,
'Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so seape hanging. Shakespeare's Timon Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings iv.
To SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.
The boiling baths at Caribadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames, which they are warm'd upon. Fa. Qu.
I will make a complimentary assault upon him, for my buliness seeth. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare
The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and stuck it into the pan. 1 Sa. ii. 13.
SEETH. n. f. [from seeth.] A boiler; a pot.
The fire thus form'd, the sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden SEGMENT. n. f. [segment, French; segmentum, Lat.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.
Even unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round.
Their segments or arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton SEGMENT. n. f. [from segment, Latin.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Dich.
To SEGREGATE. v. a. [segregate, Latin; segregare, French.]
To set apart; to separate from others.
SEGREGATION. n. f. [segregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others.
What shall we hear of this?
—A segregation of the Larkish fleet;
For do but stand upon the flaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakespeare. Othello SEIGNURIAL. adj. [from seigneur.] Invested with large powers; independent.
Those lands were seigneurial. Temple
SEIGNIOR. n. f. [from seigneur, Latin; seignior, Fr.] A lord;
the title of honour given by Italians.
SEIGNIORY. n. f. [seigneurie, Fr. from seigneur.] A lordship;
a territory.
O'Neal never had any seignior over that country, but what by inroachment he got upon the English. Spenser
Were you not reitor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's *seignior*ies? Shakespeare. H. IV.
Hofea, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seignior over themselves: which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon
William Marshall, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seignior successively.

- SEIGNORAGE*. n. f. [seigniorage, Fr. from seigneur.] Authority; acknowledgment of power.
They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seignorage. Locke
To SEIGNORISE. v. a. [from seigneur.] To lord over.
As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that *seignior*eth hell. Fairfax
SEINE. n. f. [seigne, Saxon; seine, seine, French.] A net used in fishing.
They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carver SEINER. n. f. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.
Seiners complain with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves. Carew's Survey of Cornwall
To SEIZE. v. a. [seize, French.]
1. To take possession of; to grasp; to lay hold on; to fasten on:
In her sad breast the prince's fortunes rowl,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope
2. To take forcible possession of by law.
An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden
It was judged by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon
3. To make possessed.
So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encount'reth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way. Fa. Queen
So Ptolemy, seized of Prosperine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison's Cato
To SEIZE. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.
Fairer Cordelia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be't lawful I take up what's cast away? Shakespeare. K. Lear Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing: even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Dec. of Pity SEIZIN. n. f. [seizure, French.]
1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seizin in fact, and seizin in law.
Seizin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seizin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seizin, as an inrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong dispossessed of them. Covent
2. The act of taking possession.
Every indulged sin gives Satan livery and seizin of his heart, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Decay of Piety Seizin is the same in the canon law as livery and seizin at the common law. Ayliffe's Parergon
3. The things possessed.
Many recoveries were had as well by heirs as successors of the seizin of their predecessors. Hale SEIZURE. n. f. [from seize.]
1. The act of seizing.
2. The thing seized.
Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou did'st transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days
Giv'n thee of grace. Milton's Paradise Lost
3. The act of taking forcible possession.
Thy lands, and all things that thou do'st call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shakespeare
In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole. Watton
Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Swift
4. Gripe; possession.
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind respect? Shakespeare
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden
5. Catch.
Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts
SELCOUTH. adj. [selb, rare, Sax. and couth, known.] Uncommon. Spenser. 'I he same with uncouth.
SELDOM. adv. [selban, rarely; seloon, more rarely; sel-bary, most rarely. Selban is supposed to be contracted from selban, or selb, rare, and banne, when, Saxon. Selden, Dutch; seltsam, German.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.
Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker
There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South's Sermons

SELDOMNESS. n. f. [from seldom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.
 Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the seldomness and oftentimes of doing well. Floster.
SELDSHOWN. adj. [from seld and shown.] Seldom exhibited to view.

Seldshown flamins
 Do pres among the popular throngs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
TO SELECT. v. a. [from selektu, Latin.] To chuse in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selekted out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Kneller.
 The pious chief

SELF. pronoun. plur. selves. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superiour excellence.

To the nuptial bow
 I led her, blushing like the morn: all heav'n,
 And happy constellations, on that hour Shed their selekt influence. Milton's Parad. Lost.

A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way. Prior.
SELECTION. n. f. [from selektu, Lat. from selekt.] The act of culling or chusing; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SELECTNESS. n. f. [from selekt.] The state of being select.

SELECTOR. n. f. [from selekt.] He who selects.

SELENOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from selekt and graphos, Gr. from selekt and graphein, Gr. to write.] Belonging to selenography.

SELENOGRAPHY. n. f. [from selekt and graphein, Gr. to write.] A description of the moon.

Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary. Brown.

SELF. pronoun. plur. selves. [from selekt, Gothick; selb, selbst, Sax. self, selve, Dutch.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective: very; particular; this above others, sometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that self way

Which you did shoot the first. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands,

Took off her life. Shaksp. Hamlet.

On these self hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Kaligh.

At that self moment enters Palamon Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; the people hiss me, but I clap myself; thou lovest thyself, though the world loves thee.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and so is concerned for itself, as far as that consciousness extends. Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as, myself will decide it; I myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective: joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy of our endeavour. Hale.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Watts.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,

And strive your excellent self to excel. Fairly Queen.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self; and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to it self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain

by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakespeare is often harsh.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self accusing look, finding that in her self she had shot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind, than she minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist

Shame to him whose cruel striking,

Kills for faults of his own liking! Shaksp. Hamlet.

Belona's bridegroom, laid in proof,

Confronted him with self-caparisons,

Point against point rebellious, arm 'gainst arm,

Curbing his lavish spirit. Shak. Macbeth.

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin

As self-neglecting. Shaksp. Henry V.

Anger is like

A full hot horse, who, being allow'd his way,

Self-mettle tires him. Shaksp. Hamlet.

His lords desire him to have borne

His bruised helmet and his bended sword

Before him through the city; he forbids it,

Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride. Shaksp. Hamlet.

You promis'd

SEMBLANCE, v. f. [semblance, Fr. from sembler.]
1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.
Solicite Henry with her wondrous praise;
Behold thee on her virtues, that fountaine
Her natural graces, that exquish art.
Repeat their semblance often. Shakespeare.
She's but the sign and semblance of her honour:
Behold how like a maid the blushes here!
O, what authority and slewe of truth!
Can cunning fin cover itself withall! Shakespeare.
He with high words, that bore
Seblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears. Milton.
This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells. Weedward.
It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice. Rog.

SEMI'VOWEL. n. f. [semi and vowel.] A consonant which makes an imperfect found, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.

When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semivowels. Broom's Notes to the Odyssey.

SEMPERVIVE. n. f. [semper and vivus, Latin, that is, always alive.] A plant.

The greater sempervive will put out branches two or three years; but they wrap the root in an oil cloth once in half a year. Bacon.

SEMPER'TERNAL. adj. [semper and ternus, from semper and eternus, Latin.] Eternally.

1. Eternal in futurity, having beginning, but no end.

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, a parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be *semper*ternal, or eternal a parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.

Should we the long depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers, will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run,
To some one man whose being ne'er began;
If that one man was *semper*terus, why Did he, since independent, ever die?

Blackmore.

SEMPER'TERNITY. n. f. [semper and ternitas, Latin.] Future duration without end.

The future eternity, or *semper*ternity of the world, being admitted, though the eternity a parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SEMPER'VEY. n. f. [semperve, Saxon.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred *semper*veys were employed to make me shirts, and linen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Culivier's Travels.

The tuck'd up *semper*veys walks with hatty fridges. Swift.

SENATE.

SEN

SENATE. n. f. [senatus, Latin; senat, French.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate
The nature of our seats, which will in time break ope
The locks of th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles. Shak. Coriolanus.
There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse. Milton.
He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which, if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our council had not gain'd. Denham.
Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SENATEHOUSE. n. f. [senate and house.] Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going
All to the senatehouse; some news is come. Shakespeare.
SENATOR. n. f. [senator, Latin; senateur, French.] A publick counsellor.
Most unwise patricians,
You grave but reckless senators. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
As if to ev'ry top it might belong,
Like senators, to censure, fight or wrong. Granville.

SENATORIAL. adj. [senatorial, Latin; senatorial, French.]
SENATORIAN. adj. [senatorial, Latin; senatorial, French.]
To SEND. v. a. [sendan, Gothic; senan, Saxon; senden, Dutch.]
1. To dispatch from one place to another.
There shalt thou serve thine enemies, which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger and in thirst. Deut. xxviii. 48.
Send our brother with us, and we will go down. Gen. xliii.
His citizens sent a message after him, saying, we will not have this man to reign over us. Lu. xix. 14.
The messenger came, and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for. 2 Sa. xi. 22.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along. Milton.
His wounded men he first sends off to shore. Dryden.
Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.
There have been commissions
Sent down among them, which have flow'd the heart
Of all their loyalties. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

3. To grant as from a distant place: as, if God send life.
I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Gen. xxiv. 12.
O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Pf.

4. To inflict, as from a distance.
The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto. Deut. xxviii.

5. To emit; to immit; to produce.
The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves. Bacon's Nat. History.
The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Cheyne.

6. To diffuse; to propagate.
When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the frisky tire went round:
The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,
And through the Achaian cities send the sound. Pope.

7. To let fly; to cast or shoot.
To SEND. v. n.
1. To deliver or dispatch a message.
I have made bold to send in to your wife:
My suit is that she will to Desdemona Procure me some access. Shakespeare. Othello.

2. To deliver or dispatch a message.
They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, 'till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

3. To deliver or dispatch a message.
To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.
Go with me some few of you, and see the place; and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon.

4. To deliver or dispatch a message.
He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,
He threw his aged arms about my neck,
And, seeing that I wept, he press'd me close. Dryden.

5. To deliver or dispatch a message.
SENDER. n. f. [sender, Latin.] He that sends.
This was a merry message.

—We hope to make the sender blush at it. Shak. H. V.
Love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a four offence. Shakespeare.

6. To deliver or dispatch a message.
SENESCENCE. n. f. [senescere, Latin.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay, without jarrings, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SEN

SENECHAL. n. f. [seneschal, French, of uncertain original.]
1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts, or domestic ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made for John Arundel, of Trerice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

Martha'd feast,
Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals;
The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton's Par. Lost.
The seneschal rebuk'd, in haste withdrew;
With equal haste a mental train pursue. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It afterwards came to signify other offices.
SENGREEN. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
SENNILE. adj. [senilis, Latin.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time have happily matched a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of fancy. Boyle on Colours.

SENIOR. n. f. [senior, Latin.]
1. One older than another; one who on account of longer time has some superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whitgift.

2. An aged person.
A senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY. n. f. [senior, Latin.] Eldership; priority of birth.
As in all civil institutions the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt.

Government of the Tongue.
He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be confided to his care, by the right due to his seniority. Bracco.

SENNAL. n. f. [senal, Latin.] A physical tree.
The flower, for the most part, consists of five leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose:
the point afterwards becomes a plain, incurved, bivalve pod, which is full of seeds, each being separated by a double thin membrane. The species are three. The third sort, that used in medicine, is at present very rare. Miller.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Senna tree is of two sorts: the bastard senna, and the corpion senna, both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mart.

SENNIGHT. n. f. [Contracted from seven night.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FOUR-NIGHT.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized; if the interim be but a sennight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakespeare. As you like it.

SENCULAR. adj. [seni and oculus, Latin.] Having six eyes.
Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some fennicular. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SENSATION. n. f. [sensation, French; sentatio, school Latin.] Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glasse. Stiff.
The brain, disordered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerves, and protruded to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise. Harvey on Consumption.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.
The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. f. [sens, French; sensus, Latin.]
1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived;
the sight; touch; hearing; smell; taste.

This pow'r is sense; which from abroad doth bring
The colour, taste, and touch, and scent, and sound,
The quantity and shape of ev'ry thing
Within earth's centre, or heav'n's circle found:
And though things sensible be numberless,
But only five the sense's organs be;
And in those five, all things their forms express:
Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear or see. Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains
The pow'r of sense within a greater pow'r,
Which doth employ and use the sense's pains;
But fits and rules within her private bow'r. Davies.

Both contain
Within them ev'ry lower faculty
Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste. Milt.
Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder's Elements of Speech.

There's

SEN

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.
In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcursion throughout the whole. Bacon's Natural History.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have found minds which have their senses found;
But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind. Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.
This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Sidd.
God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far. Milton.

Why hast thou added sense of endless woes?
Sensefulness; quickness or keenness of perception.
He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge. Shakespeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.
Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses. Shaksp.
God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities, which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis sense,
Good sense, which only is the gift of heav'n,
And though no science, fairly worth the sev'n:
A light within yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Notre have it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.
He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:
You see he knows not me, his natural father;
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.
I speak my private but impartial sense
With freedom, and I hope, without offence. Rogers.

8. Consciousness; conviction.
In the due sense of my want of learnings, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.
Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.
In this sense to be preserved from all sin is not impossible.
Hooker, b. v.

My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakespeare.
This comes out of a haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves. Mor's Antidote against Atheism.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory; and what is sense, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.
In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words. Whitt's Logic.

SENSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. A word not in use.

Let the schoolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes. Glasse. Scip.

SENSEFUL. adj. [from sense and full.] Reasonable; judicious.
Men, otherwise senseless and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation. Norris.

SENSELESS. adj. [from sense.]
1. Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.
The charm and venom, which they drunk,
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion dreadfully stunk. F. & Q.

The cars are senseless that should give us hearing.
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd. Shak. Hamlet.

You blocks, you worse than senseless things!
It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones. Locke.

2. Unfeeling; wanting perception.
The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows. Rowe.
Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; blockish.

They would repent this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them. Clarendon.

SEN

If we be not extremely foolish, thankless, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to cure sorrow than a great trouble is. Taylor.
The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny. Tillotson.

She saw her favour was misplac'd;
The fellows had a wretched taste:
She needs must tell them to their face,
They were a senseless stupid race. Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgment; contrary to reason.
It is a senseless thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preferred by religion. South.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, little wiser than they, destroy their young by senseless fondness, and too much embracing. Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception.
To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpalice in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and overcold judgment. Peacham.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious. With of.
The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Patten'd in vice; so callous and so gross,
He finds and feels not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

Hear this,
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines,
Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed. Southerne.

SENSELESSLY. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner;
stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully. Locke.

SENSELESSNESS. n. f. [from senseless.] Folly; unreasonableness;
absurdity; stupidity.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the nether jaw with the upper. Grew.

SENSIBILITY. n. f. [sensibilité, French.]
1. Quickness of sensation.
Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul:
it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hurtful. Addison's Spectator.

2. Quickness of perception.
SENSELESS. adj. [sensibile, French; sensilis, Latin.]
1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambric were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Shakespeare.
These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty. Glasse. Scip.

2. Perceptible by the senses.
By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible: it reflecteth, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unfeeling as are to be known. Hooker.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still:
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Shakespeare. Macbeth.

The space left and acquired in every sensible moment in such progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense. Glasse. Scip.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter. Newton.

The far greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability to far to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects. Rogers's Sermons.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it. Arbutnot on Air.

3. Perceived by the mind.
Idleness was punished by so many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain. Tenison.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses; having perception by the mind or senses.
This must needs remove
The sensible of pain. Milton.

I saw you in the East at your first arising: I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian. Dryden.
I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep; but I do say, he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

SEN

The verification is as beautiful as the description complete; every ear must be sensible of it. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
5. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy, Shakespeare.
6. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected. Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong, Dryd.
7. Convinced; persuaded. A low use.

They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatic; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise. I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.

2. Actual perception by mind or body.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medicaments. Sharp.

4. Painful consciousness. There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SENSIBLY. adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.

He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed Of that self-blood, that first gave life to you. Shakespeare.

A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly. Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arb.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

Externally; by impression on the senses. That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception:

5. In low language, judiciously; reasonably: SENSITIVE. adj. [from sensit, French.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin; yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE PLANT. n. f. [mimosa, Latin.] A plant. The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many laminae in the centre: these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the petiole of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Milner.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen, that the plant which well we name the sensitive, should move and feel?

Whence know her leaves to answer her command, And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand? Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner. The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORY. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensory, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

SEN

As sound in a bell or musical strings or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensory, 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensitive species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton's Opt.

2. Organ of sensation. That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Beault.

SENSUAL. adj. [from sensual, French.]

1. Confining in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses. Men in general are too partial, in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Esprit.

Far as creation's ample range extends, The scale of sensual, mental power ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual. The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious. From amidst them rose Belial, the dissolute spirit that fell, The sensualist; and, after Almodai, The fleshliest incubus. Paradise Regain'd.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity. Asterley.

SENSUALIST. n. f. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporeal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose her's. South.

SENSUALITY. n. f. [from sensual.] Devotedness to the senses; addition to brutal and corporeal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals That rage in savage sensuality. Shakespeare.

Kill not her quick'ning power with surfeitings; Mar not her sense with sensuality: Cast not her serious wit on idle things; Make not her free will slave to vanity. Devi.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. South. They avoid dress, lest they should have affections turned by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Beault.

TO SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensual.] To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe. Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sensu.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate. Mil.

SENT. The participle passive of send. I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; forasmuch as thou art sent of the king. Exr. vii. 14.

SENTENCE. n. f. [sententia, French; sententia, Latin.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal. The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounce of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Jer. iv. 12.

How will I give sentence against them. If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigour of a condemning sentence. South's Sermons.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom. By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many? Bacon's Holy War.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass? Milner.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral. A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

SEN

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing. An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, and shewing of hard sentences were found in Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

TO SENTENCE. v. a. [sentencio, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one. After this cold confidence, sentence me; And, as you are a king, speak in your state, What I have done that misbecame my place. Came the mild judge and intercessor both, To sentence man. Shakespeare.

2. To condemn. Could that decree from our brother come? Nature herself is sentenced in your doom: Milton.

Pity is no more. Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes. Dryden.

SENTENTIALLY. n. f. [from sententious.] Comprehension in a sentence. Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententious of common conceits with us. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sentence.] Abounding with short sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic. He is very swift and sententious. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues: Sententious flowers! O let them fall; Their cadence is rhetorical. Gray.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms, Forsook us useful and sententious truths. Waller.

How he apes his fire, Ambitiously sententious. Addison's Cato.

The making of those figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them; as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew's Cosmol.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententious.] In short sentences; with striking brevity. They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententious: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon's Essays.

Nausea delivers her judgment sententious, to give it more weight. Broom.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength. The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryd.

SENTERY. n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army. What strength, what art can then Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe Through the strict senteries, and stations thick Of angels watching round. Milton.

SENTIENT. adj. [sentiens, Latin.] Perceiving; having perception. This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that without any formal syllogism prelieth him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT. n. f. [From the adjective.] He that has perception. If the sentient be carried, passions equis, with the body, whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is inflexible. Glanv. Sciess.

SENTIMENT. n. f. [sentiment, French.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion. The consideration of the reason, why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Lat.

Alike to council or th' assembly came, With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentence in a composition. SENTINEL. n. f. [sentinelle, French, from sentia, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise. Norfolk, his three to thy charge; Use careful watch, chafe trustly sentinel. Shakespeare. R. III.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear. Bacon's Essays.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing power, Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel, Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tower; And though both see, yet both but one thing tell. Davies.

Love to our citadel resorts, Through those deceitful fallports; Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

The senses are situate in the head, as sentinels in a watchtower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Ray on the Creation.

SEP

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unfoldierlike. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

SENTRY. n. f. [Corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise. If I do send, dispatch Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve For a short holding. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep, And set their sentries to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow, A wakeful sentry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentry. Here toils and death, and death's half brother, sleep, Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep, O'er my slumbers sentry keep; Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes, Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.

SEPARABILITY. n. f. [from separable.] The quality of admitting division or discernment. Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glanv.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE. adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptive of division; discernible. Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbuthnot.

SEPARABLENESS. n. f. [from separable.] Capableness of being separable. Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

TO SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Latin; separer, French.]

1. To break; to divide into parts. I'll to England. —To Ireland, I: our separated fortunes Shall keep us both the sicer. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Resolved, Rather than death, or aught than death more dread, Shall separate us. Milton.

3. To sever from the rest. Can a body be inflammable, from which it would puzzle a chymist to separate an inflammable ingredient? Boyle.

Death from sin no power can separate. Milton.

4. To set apart; to segregate. Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. Acts xiii. 2.

David separated to the service those who should prophesy. 1 Chron. xxv. 1.

5. To withdraw. Separate thyself from me: if thou wilt take the left, I will go to the right. Gen. xiii. 9.

SEPARATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Divided from the rest. Eve separate he with'd. Milton.

'Twere hard to conceive an eternal watch, whose pieces were never separate one from another, nor ever in any other form. Burnet's Theory of the Earths.

In a secret vale the Trojan sees A separate grove. Dryden.

2. Diffused from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or else the soul, or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.] Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly. It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council, both separately and together; for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bac.

If you admit of many figures, then conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SEPARATENESS. n. f. [from separate.] The state of being separate. SEPARATION. n. f. [separatio, Lat. separation, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction. They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Avot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated,

SEP

- nicated, that which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.

Where merit is not sepulchre'd alive;
Where good men's virtues them to honours bring,
And not to dangers. Ben. Johnson.
- Thou too sepulchre'd in such pomp do'st lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.
- Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,
And, deep furchard, by sandy mountains lie, Obscurely sepulchre'd. Prior.
- SEPULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchra, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Internment; burial.
- That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she credited over her sepulchre a marble tomb of her own. Brown.
- Where we may royal sepulture prepare;
With speed to Meleinda bring relief,
Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryden.
- In England sepulture, or burial of the dead, may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Asyl.
- SEQUEACIOUS. adj. [sequeacius, Latin.]
1. Following; attendant.
- Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard and straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

SEQ

- Above those superstitious horrors that enslave
The fond sequacious herd, to mystick faith
And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few
The glorious stranger hail! Thomson.
2. Ductile; pliant.
- In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Roy.
- SEQUACITY. n. f. [from sequax, Latin.] Ductility; toughness.
- Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lentor, and sequacity. Bacon's Natural History.
- SEQUEL. n. f. [sequelle, French; sequela, Latin.]
1. Conclusion; succeeding part.
 - If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek enforcement shall acquaintance me. Shakespeare. R. III.
 - Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor: but was he not also successful? True, but still he was poor: and once grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised. South's Sermons.
 2. Consequence; event.
 - Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fall, or (twere), and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever dependeth on it? Hooker.
 - In these he put two weights,
The sequel each of parting and of fight. Milton's Par. Lost.
 3. Consequence inferred; consequentialness.
 - What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon; ergo, he is only a deacon. Whitgift.
- SEQUENCE. n. f. [from sequor, Latin.]
1. Order of succession.
 - How art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession? Shakespeare. R. II.
 2. Series; arrangement; method.
 - The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence, and series of the seasons of the year. Bacon's Nat. History.
- SEQUENT. adj. [sequens, Latin.]
1. Following; succeeding.
 - Let my trial be mine own confession:
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg. Shakespeare. Macb. for Measure.
 - There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown, Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks To stop their overgrowth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 2. Consequential.
 - SEQUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.
 - Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried. Shakespeare.
 - TO SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequester, Fr. sequester, Spanish; sequestro, low Latin.]
 1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.
 - Why are you sequester'd from all your train? Shakespeare.
 - To the which place a poor sequester'd tag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakespeare. As you like it.
 - In shady bow'r,
More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd, Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Milton.
 - Ye sacred Nine! that all my foul possesse, Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions blest,
Bear me, oh bear me to sequester'd scenes
Of bow'rly mazes, and surrounding greens. Pope.
 2. To put aside; to remove.
 - Although I had wholly sequestered my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of long continued experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.
 3. To withdraw; to segregate.
 - A thing as seasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatness weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action. Hooker.
 4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others.
 5. To deprive of possessions.
 - It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragous, which sequestered him; and, in a word, he came by his poverty as insensibly as some usually do by their riches. South.
 - SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequestrate.]
 1. Subject to privation.
 2. Capable of separation.
 - Hartthorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not unreasonably sequesterable salt. Boyle.
 - TO SEQUESTRATE. v. n. To sequester; to separate from company.
 - In general contagions more perish for want of necessities than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind. Arbutnot on Air.

- SEQUESTRA'TION. n. f. [sequestration, Fr. from sequestrate.]
1. Separation; retirement.
 - His addition was to courses vain;
I never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity. Shakespeare. Henry V.
 - There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise and toils of the world; for truth seems to be seen by eyes too much fixt upon inferior objects. South's Sermons.
 2. Disunion; disjunction.
 - The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles. Boyle.
 3. State of being set aside.
 - Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had. Shakespeare. H. VI.
 4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.
 - If there be a single spot in the glebe more barren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration. Swift.
- SEQUESTRA'TOR. n. f. [from sequestrate.] One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.
- I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me. Taylor.
- SERAP'ICLO. n. f. [Italian, perhaps of Oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.
- There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.
- SERAPH. n. f. [שראף.] One of the orders of angels.
- He is infinitely more remote in the real excellency of his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Locke.
- As full, as perfect in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns. Pope.
- SERAPHICAL. adj. [seraphique, French; from seraph.] Angelical.
- SERAPHICK. adj. [seraphic, English.] Angelical.
- Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Taylor.
- Seraphick arms and trophies.
'Tis to the world a secret yet,
Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
Talks in high romantick strain;
Or whether he at last defends
The neck with less seraphick ends. Swift.
- SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.
- To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Com. Pr.
- Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Is. vi. 6.
- Of seraphim another row.
SERE. adj. [crepan, Saxon, to dry.] Dry; withered; no longer green. See SEAR.
- The muses, that were wont green bays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches here. Spenser.
- He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere, Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungente. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
- Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter sere foment. Milton.
- They sere wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryden.
- On a sere branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down, Musing and still. Rousseau's Royal Convert.
- SERE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like sere, from crepan, Saxon, to cut?] Claw; talon.
- Two eagles,
That, mounted on the winds, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow
Shook their thick wings, and threatening death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager feres. Chapman.
- SERENADE. n. f. [serenade, Fr. serenata, Italian, whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Latin, the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Music or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.
- Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenade, which the star'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain. Milton.
- Foolish swallow, what do'st thou
So often at my window do,
With thy tuneless serenade?
23 P
- Cowley: Shall

SER

Shall I the neighbours nightly rest invade,
At her deaf doors, with some vile serenade? Dryden.
Will fancies he never should have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenades, when he was a young fellow. Addison.
TO SERENADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with nocturnal music.
He continued to serenade her every morning, 'till the queen was charmed with his harmony. Spektator.
SERENE. adj. [from seren, French; serenus, Latin.]
1. Calm; placid; quiet.
Spirits live insph'rd
In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Milton.
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.
2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; shewing a calm mind.
There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Milton.
Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Grew's Cosm.
Gutta SERENA. n. f. An obstruction in the optic nerve.
These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs. Milton.
SERENE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.
Where ever death doth please t' appear,
Seas, serenes, swords, shot, sickness, all are there. Ben. Jonson.
TO SERENE. v. a. [from seren, French; serenus, Latin.]
1. To calm; to quiet.
2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.
Take care
Thy muddy bev'rage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the safer rosy lees. Philips.
SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]
1. Calmly; quietly.
The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.
2. With unruffled temper; coolly.
Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men would, without fume or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.
The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair:
Soft fell her words as flow the air. Prior.
SERENENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Serenity.
SERENITUDE. n. f. [from seren.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.
From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Watson.
SERENITY. n. f. [from seren, Fr. from serenus, Latin.]
1. Calmness; temperance.
In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Bentley.
Pure serenity apace
Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.
2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.
A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.
3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.
I cannot see how any men should ever transgress those moral rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Locke.
SERGE. n. f. [from serge, French; xerxa, Spanish, which Covarru- vias derives from xirica, Arabic; Skinner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of cloth.
The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.
Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloaths and serges grow. Gay.
SERGEANT. n. f. [from sergent, French; sergente, Italian, from sergius, Latin.]
1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.
Had I but time, as this fell sergent, death,
Is strict in his arrest, oh, I could tell. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
When it was day the magistrates sent the sergents, saying, let these men go. Acts xvi. 35.
2. A petty officer in the army.
This is the sergent,
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought. Shakespeare, Macb.
3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.
None should be made sergents, but such as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Bacon.
4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, sergent chirurgeons.
SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from sergent.]
Grand sergeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he seeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do it himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation; or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars: as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Covent.

SER

SERGEANTSHIP. n. f. [from sergent.] The office of a sergent.
SERIES. n. f. [from serie, Fr. series, Latin.]
1. Sequence; order.
Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text as it lies in the series of the epistle. Ward of Infidelity.
The chains of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series. Pope.
2. Succession; course.
This is the series of perpetual woes,
Which thou, alas, and thine are born to know. Pope.
SERIOUS. adj. [from serius, Fr. serius, Latin.]
1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behav' Pope.
2. Important; weighty; not trifling.
I'll hence to London on a serious matter. Shakespeare, H. VI.
There's nothing serious in mortality;
All is but toys. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.
It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprize that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another. South.
All laugh to find
Unthinking plainness to o'erspread thy mind,
That thou couldst seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a god. Dryden.
Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously infinitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors. Addison.
SERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.
That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermon.
The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day. Addison's Spectator.
SARMOCINATOR. n. f. [from sarmocinatus, Latin.] The act of practice of making speeches.
SARMOCINATOR. n. f. [from sarmocinor, Latin.] A preacher; a speechmaker.
These obstreperous sarmocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar. Hobbes.
SARMOX. n. f. [from sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.] A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.
As for our sermons, be they never so found and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed. Hooker.
This our life, exempt from publick haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing. Shakespeare, Titus.
In his sermons unto the soldiers, and in open talk with the nobility, it should seem that he himself had been enough to have overthrown the Turks. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Sermon he heard, yet not to many
As left no time to practise any.
He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again. Croft's Sermon.
Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice. South.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
TO SERMON. v. a. [from sermon, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To discourse as in a sermon.
Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermon at large, than thus closely in-wrapped in allegorical devices. Speijer.
2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.
Come, sermon me no farther:
No villainous beauty yet hadt past my heart. Shakespeare, Timon.
SARMONUTARIS, or Sylis. n. f. [from sermo, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a rose and unbelated flower, consisting of several leaves, which are ranged orbicularly, and rest on the empa-lement, which becomes a fruit composed of two large oblong furrowed seeds, having foliaceous ridges on one side. To these notes must be added, that the lobes of the leaves are large, long, and intire, excepting their extremity, where they are slightly cut into three parts. Müller.

SERPENT.

SER

SERPENT. n. f. [from serpens, Fr.] Thin or watery part of the blood.
In these the salt and lixiviated serpity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds. Brown.
The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serpity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, ædematose, and scirrhus, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbutnot.
SEROUS. adj. [from seruus, French; serosus, Latin.]
1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the gummy or red part.
2. Adapted to the serum.
This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a dropy by a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium. Arbutnot on Diet.
SERPENT. n. f. [from serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds; the viper, which brings young, and the snake, that lays eggs.
She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water filled up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enroll,
That horror made to all that did behold. Fairy Queen.
She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wand'ring, found their way. Milton.
Haply piercing through the dark disguise,
The chief I challeng'd: he whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent mazes of deceit, Eludes my search. Pope's Odyssey.
SERPENTINE. adj. [from serpens, Lat. from serpens.]
1. Resembling a serpent.
I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am. Shakespeare.
This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock. Brown.
Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show Thy inward fraud. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have, I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent. Dryden.
2. Winding like a serpent; sinuous.
Nor can the fun
Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct, but where he rolls to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozzing line Steals by that point, and so is serpentine. Donne.
His hand the adorned firmament display'd,
Those serpentine, yet constant motions made.
How many spacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and mazes serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits in Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main? Blackmore.
SERPENTINE. n. f. An herb. Disfworth.
SERPENTINE STONE. n. f.
There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. They were all of the marble kind: the one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black opites; another, called the white opites, was green also, but variegated with spots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The first species was chiefly used in medicine, and found by the ancients only in Egypt; but it is frequent in the deserts of Arabia, in the islands of the Archipelago, in Italy, and we have whole quarries of it in Wales. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected. Hill's Mat. Med.
Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four and twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the plecten and gravel. Watt's.
SERPENT'S TONGUE. n. f. An herb. Disfworth.
SERPET. n. f. A basket. Disfworth.
SERPIGINOUS. adj. [from serpigo, Latin.] Dicaled with a serpigo.
The skin behind her ear downwards became serpiginous, and was covered with white scales. Wise.
SERPIGO. n. f. [Latin.] A kind of tetter.
For thy own bowels, which do call thee fire,
Do curle the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner. Shakespeare.
She had a node with pains on her right leg, and a serpigo on her right hand. Wise.
TO SERRE. v. a. [from serre, French.] To drive hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

SER

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or sering of the spirits, to resist in some measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike. Bacon's Nat. History.
Heat attenuates and sends forth the spirit of a body, and upon that the more gross parts contract and serre themselves together. Bacon.
SERRATE. adj. [from seriatus, Latin.] Formed with jags or SERRATED. } indentures like the edge of a saw.
All that have serate teeth are carnivorous. Ray.
The common heron hath long legs for wading, a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, a wide throat to pouch it, and long toes with strong hooked talons, one of which is remarkably serate on the edge. Derham's Physico-Theology.
This stick is usually knotted, and always armed: one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indentured or serated on both edges: a scurvy weapon. Grew.
SERRATION. n. f. [from sera, Latin.] Formation in the shape of a saw.
SERRATURE. n. f. [from sera, Latin.] Indenture like teeth of saws.
These are serated on the edges; but the seratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest. Woodward.
TO SERRE. v. a. [from serre, French; serato, Italian.] To press close; to drive hard together. For serre Bacon uses serre; but neither serre nor serre are received.
With them rose
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serried shields in thick array.
Of death immeasurable. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Foul dissipation follow'd, and fore'd rout;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serried files. Milton's Par. Lost.
SERVANT. n. f. [from servant, French; servus, Latin.]
1. One who attends another, and acts at his command. The correlative of master.
We are one in fortune; both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most. Shakespeare.
I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shakespeare, R. III.
He disdain'd not Thenceforth the form of servant to assume. Milton.
For master or for servant here to call
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.
2. One in a state of subjection. Unusual.
Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect,
Which else should free have wrong'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
3. A word of civility used to superiors or equals.
This subjection, due from all men to all men, is something more than the compliment of courtesy, when our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves. Swift.
TO SERVANT. v. a. [from the noun.] To subject. Not in use.
My affairs
Are servanted to others: though I owe My revenge properly, remission lies In Volcanic breasts. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
TO SERVE. v. a. [from servir, French; servire, Latin.]
1. To attend at command.
Because thou art my brother, should'st thou therefore serve me for nought? Gen. xxix. 15.
A goddess among gods ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.
2. To obey fervently or meekly.
When wealthy, shew thy wisdom not to be
To wealth a servant, but make wealth serve thee. Denham.
3. To supply with food ceremoniously.
Others, pamper'd in their shameless pride,
Are serv'd in plate, and in their chariots ride. Dryden.
4. To bring as a menial attendant.
Bid them cover the tables, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.
Soon after our dinner was serv'd in, which was right good viands, both for bread and meat: we had also drink of three sorts, all wholesome and good. Bacon.
Besmeared with the horrid juice of sepia, they danced a little in phantastick postures, retired a while, and then returned serv'd up a banquet as at solemn funerals. Taylor.

It pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time.

Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me?

He settest an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection.

In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it, but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times; for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice.

For using set and prescribed forms, there is no doubt but that wholesome words, being known, are aptest to excite judicious and fervent affections.

His seed, when is not set, shall bruise my head.

Though set form of prayer be an abomination,

Set forms of petitions find great approbation.

Set places and set hours are but parts of that worship we owe.

That law cannot keep men from taking more use than you set, the want of money being that alone which regulates its price, will appear, if we consider how hard it is to set a price upon unnecessary commodities; but how impossible it is to set a rate upon victuals in a time of famine.

Set him such a task, to be done in such a time.

As in the subordinations of government the king is offended by any insults to an inferior magistrate, so the sovereign ruler of the universe is affronted by a breach of allegiance to those whom he has set over us.

Take set times of meditating on what is future.

Should a man go about, with never so set study and design, to describe such a natural form of the year as that which is at present established, he could scarcely ever do it in so few words that were to fit.

To exhibit; to display; to propose.

Through the variety of my reading, I set before me many examples both of ancient and lat r times.

Reject not then what offer'd means: who knows

But God hath set before us, to return thee

Home to thy country and his sacred house?

Long has my soul desir'd this time and place,

To set before your sight your glorious race.

All that can be done is to set the thing before men, and to offer it to their choice.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,

That set th' unhappy Phaeton to view:

The flaming chariot and the steeds it flew'd,

And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd.

When his fortune sets before him all

The poms and pleasures that his soul can wish,

His rigid virtue will accept of none.

He supplies his not appearing in the present scene of action, by setting his character before us, and continually forcing his patience, prudence, and valour upon our observation.

14. To value; to estimate; to rate.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at naught?

To pluck down justice from your awful bench,

To trip the course of law?

The backwardness parents shew in divulging their faults, will make them set a greater value on their credit themselves, and teach them to be the more careful to preserve the good opinion of others.

If we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous, but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery.

Have I not set at naught my noble birth,

A spotless fame, and an unblemish'd race?

The peace of innocence, and pride of virtue?

My prodigality has giv'n thee all.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,

Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,

We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,

And always set the gem above the flow'r.

15. To flake at play.

What sad disorders play begets!

Desp'rate and mad, at length he sets

Those dances, whose points make gods adore.

16. To offer a wager at dice to another.

Who sets me else? I'll throw at all.

17. To fix in metal.

Think so vast a treasure as your son

Too great for any private man's possession;

And him too rich a jewel to be set

In vulgar metal, or vulgar use.

He may learn to cut, polish, and set precious stones.

18. To embarrass; to distress; to perplex. [This is used, I think, by mistake, for beset: as,

Adam, hard beset, replied.

Those who raise popular murmurs and discontents against his majesty's government, that they find so very few and so very improper occasions for them, shew how hard they are set in this particular, represent the bill as a grievance.

19. To fix in an artificial manner, so as to produce a particular effect.

The proud have laid a snare for me, they have set gins.

20. To apply to something.

Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury, that the Lord may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to.

With what'er gall thou settest thyself to write,

Thy inoffensive failures never bite.

21. To fix the eyes.

</

SET

- Joy salutes me when I set
My blest eyes on Amoret. Walter.
12. To offer for a price.
There is not a more wicked thing than a covetous man; for such an one setteth his own soul to sale. Ecclesi. x. 9.
23. To place in order; to frame.
After it was framed, and ready to be set together, he was,
with infinite labour and charge, carried by land with camels, through that hot and sandy country, from Cairo to Suetia. Kneller's History of the Turks.
24. To station; to place.
Census has betray'd
The bitter truths that our loose court upbraid;
Your friend was set upon you for a spy,
And on his witness you are doom'd to die. Dryden.
25. To oppose.
Will you set your wit to a fool's?
They should make them play-games, or endeavour it, and set themselves about it. Shakespeare.
26. To bring to a fine edge; as, to set a razor.
27. To set about. To apply to.
They should make them play-games, or endeavour it, and set themselves about it. Locke.
28. To set against. To place in a state of enmity or opposition.
The terrors of God do set themselves in array against me.
Job vi. 4.
The king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem. Ezek.
The devil hath reason to set himself against it; for nothing is more destructive to him than a soul armed with prayer. Durpa.
There should be such a being as afflicts us against our worst enemies, and comforts us under our sharpest sufferings, when all other things set themselves against us. Tillotson.
29. To set against. To oppose; to place in rhetorical opposition.
This perishing of the world in a deluge is set against, or compared with, the perishing of the world in the conflagration. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
30. To set apart. To neglect for a season.
They highly commended his forwardness, and all other matters for that time set apart. Kneller.
31. To set aside. To omit for the present.
Set your knighthood and your soldier'ship aside, and give me leave to tell you that you lie in your throat. Shakespeare. H. IV.
In 1585 followed the prosperous expedition of Drake and Carrillo into the West Indies; in the which I set aside the taking of St. Jago and St. Domingo in Hispaniola, as surprizes rather than encounters. Bacon.
My highest interest is not to be deceived about these matters; therefore, setting aside all other considerations, I will endeavour to know the truth, and yield to that. Tillotson.
32. To set aside. To reject.
I'll look into the pretensions of each, and shew upon what ground 'tis that I embrace that of the deluge, and set aside all the rest. Wadward's Nat. History.
- No longer now does my neglected mind
Its wonted stores and old ideas find:
Fix'd judgment there no longer does abide,
To taste the true, or set the false aside. Prior.
33. To set aside. To abrogate; to annul.
Several innovations, made to the detriment of the English merchants, are now intirely set aside. Addison.
- There may be Reasons of so much pow'r and cogent force,
As may ev'n set aside this right of birth:
If sons have rights, yet fathers have 'em too. Rowe.
He shows what absurdities follow upon such a supposition, and the greater those absurdities are, the more strongly do they evinced the falsity of that supposition from whence they flow, and consequently the truth of the doctrine set aside by that supposition. Atterbury.
34. To set by. To regard; to esteem.
David behaved himself more wisely than all, so that his name was much set by. 1 Sa. xviii. 30.
35. To set by. To reject or omit for the present.
You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue; though the propagation of the faith, whereof we shall speak in the proper place, were set by,
and not made part of the case. Bacon.
36. To set down. To mention; to explain; to relate in writing.
They have set down, that a rose set by garlick is sweeter, because the more fetid juice goeth into the garlick. Bacon.
Some rules were to be set down for the government of the army. Cleveland.
I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of these rural statesmen. Addison.
37. To set down. To register or note in any book or paper;
to put in writing.
Let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Every man, careful of virtuous conversation, studious of scripture, and given unto any abstinence in diet, was set down in his calendar of suspected Prelatians. Hosker.

SET

- Take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
The reasons that led me into the meaning which prevailed on my mind, are set down. Locke.
An eminent instance of this, to shew what use can do, I shall set down. Locke.
I cannot forbear setting down the beautiful description Claudian has made of a wild beast, newly brought from the woods, and making its first appearance in a full amphitheatre. Addison.
38. To set down. To fix on a resolve.
Finding him so resolutely set down, that he was neither by fair nor foul means, but only by force, to be removed out of his town, he inclosed the same round. Kneller.
39. To set down. To fix; to establish.
This law we may name eternal, being that order which God before all others hath set down with himself, for himself to do all things by. Hosker.
40. To set forth. To publish; to promulgate; to make appear.
My willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuit. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
The poems, which have been to set forth under his name, are as he first writ them. Waller.
41. To set forth. To raise; to send out.
Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to defy the seas. Albus.
The Venetian admiral had a fleet of sixty galleys, set forth by the Venetians. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
They agreed, all with one consent, at a prefixed day, to send unto Vienna such warlike forces, as they had in any time before set forth, for the defence of the Christian religion.
Kneller's History of the Turks.
- When poor Rutilius spends all his worth,
In hopes of setting one good dinner forth,
'Tis downright madness. Dryden's Juvenal.
42. To set forth. To display; to explain.
As for words to set forth such lewdness, it is not hard for them to give a goodly and painted view thereunto, borrowed even from the praises proper to virtue. Speiser.
So little have these false colours dishonoured painting, that they have only served to set forth her praise, and to make her merit further known. Dryden's Duffry.
43. To set forth. To arrange; to place in order.
Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth
In best appointment all our regiments. Shakespeare. K. John.
44. To set forth. To show; to exhibit.
To render our errors more monstrous, and what unto a miracle set forth the patience of God, he hath endeavoured to make the world believe he was God himself. Brown.
Whereas it is commonly set forth green or yellow, it is inclining to white. Brown's Vulg. Err.
To set forth great things by small.
The two humours of a cheerful trust in providence, and a suspicious diffidence of it, are very well set forth here for our instruction. L'Estrange.
45. To set forward. To advance; to promote.
They yield that reading may set forward, but not begin the work of salvation. Hosker.
Amongst them there are not those helps which others have,
to set them forward in the way of life.
In the external form of religion, such things as are apparently or can be sufficiently proved effectual, and generally fit to set forward godliness, either as betokening the greatness of God, or as becoming the dignity of religion, or as concuring with celestial impressions in the minds of men, may be reverently thought of. Hosker.
They mar my path, they set forward my calamity. Job.
Dung or chalk, applied seasonably to the roots of trees, doth set them forward. Bacon's Nat. History.
46. To set in. To put in a way to begin.
If you please to assist and set me in, I will recollect myself. Calver.
47. To set off. To decorate; to recommend; to adorn; to embellish. It answers to the French relever.
Like bright metal on a fallen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my faults,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare. H. IV.
The prince put thee into my service for no other reason than to set me off. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Neglect not the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Bacon.
May you be happy, and your sorrows past
Set off those joys I wish may ever last. Waller.
The figures of the groupes must contrast each other by their several positions: thus in a play four characters must be raised to oppose others, and to set them off. Dryden.

SET

- The men, whose hearts are aimed at, are the occasion that one part of the face lies under a kind of disguise, while the other is so much set off, and adorned by the owner. Addison.
Their women are perfect mistresses in shewing themselves to the best advantage: they are always gay and sprightly, and set off the worst faces with the best airs. Addison.
The general good sense and worthiness of his character, makes his friends observe these little singularities as foils, that rather set off than blemish his good qualities. Addison.
The work will never take, if it is not set off with proper scenes. Addison.
Claudian sets off his description of the Eridanus with all the poetical fables. Addison on Italy.
48. To set on or upon. To animate; to incite; to incite.
You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope, or never discovered it, stop with despair. Sidney.
He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast; and even now he spake Iago set him on. Shakespeare. Othello.
Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this. Shakespeare.
Earch set thee on against us, to deliver us unto the Chaldeans. Jer. xliii. 3.
He should be thought to be mad, or set on and employed by his own or the malice of other men to abuse the duke. Claren.
In opposition his Grim death, my son and foe, who sets them on. Milton.
The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insubling baseness, when backed with greivous and set on by misinformation. Saul's Sermon.
The skill used in dressing up power, will serve only to give a greater edge to man's natural ambition: what can this do but set men on the more eagerly to scramble? Locke.
A prince's court introduces a kind of luxury, that sets every particular person upon making a higher figure than is consistent with his revenue. Addison.
49. To set on or upon. To attack; to assault.
There you missing me, I was taken up by pyrates, who putting me under board prisoner, presently set upon another ship, and maintaining a long fight, in the end put them all to the sword. Sidney.
Cassio hath here been set on in the dark:
He's almost slain, and Rodorigo dead. Shakespeare. Othello.
So other foes may set upon our back. Shakespeare. H. VI.
Alphonse, captain of another of the galleys, suffering his men to frigate too far into the land, was set upon by a Turkish pyrate, and taken. Kneller.
Of one hundred ships there came scarce thirty to work: howbeit with them, and such came daily in, we set upon them;
and gave them the chase. Bacon's War with Spain.
If I had been set upon by villains, I would have redeemed that evil by this which I now suffer. Taylor.
When once I am set upon, 'twill be too late to be whetting when I should be fighting. L'Estrange.
When some rival power invades a right,
Flies set on flies, and turtles turtles fight. Garth's Dispens.
50. To set on. To employ as in a task.
Set on thy wife to observe. Shakespeare. Othello.
51. To set on or upon. To fix the attention; to determine to any thing with settled and full resolution.
It becomes a true lover to have your heart more set upon her good than your own, and to bear a tenderer respect to her honour than your satisfaction. Sidney.
Some I found wondrous harsh,
Contempruous, proud, set on revenge and spite. Milton.
52. To set out. To assign; to allot.
The rest, unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thrill, should be placed in part of the lands by them won, at better rate than others, to whom the same shall be set out. Spau.
The squaring of a man's thoughts to the lot that providence has set out for him is a blessing. L'Estrange.
53. To set out. To publish.
I will set out no other authority than that excellent proclamation set out by the king in the first year of his reign, and an-nexed before the book of Common Prayer. Bacon.
If all should be set out to the world by an angry whig, the consequence must be a confinement of our friend for some months more to his garret. Swift.
54. To set out. To mark by boundaries or distinctions of space.
Time and place, taken thus for determinate portions of those infinite abysses of space and duration, set out, or supposed to be distinguished from the rest by known boundaries, have each a twofold acceptation. Locke.
55. To set out. To adorn; to embellish.
An ugly woman, in a rich habit set out with jewels, nothing can become. Dryden.
56. To set out. To raise; to equip.
The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses. Addison on Italy.
57. To set out. To show; to display; to recommend.

SET

- Barbarossa, in his discourses concerning the conquest of Africk, set him out as a most fit instrument for subduing the kingdom of Tunis. Kneller.
I could set out that best side of Luther, which our author, in the picture he has given us of him, has thrown into shade, that he might place a supposed deformity more in view. Atterb.
58. To set out. To show; to prove.
Those very reasons set out how heinous his sin was. Atterb.
59. To set up. To erect; to establish newly.

could be set up against mortality. Shakespeare.
I'll translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David over Israel. 2 Sa. iii. 10.
Of those that lead these parties, if you could take off the major number, the lesser would govern; nay, if you could take off all, they would set up one, and follow him. Suckling.
Homer took all occasions of setting up his own countrymen
the Grecians, and of undervaluing the Trojan chiefs. Dryden.
Whatever practical rule is generally broken, it cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men should, without shame or fear, serenely break a rule which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.
62. To set up. To place in view.
He hath taken me by my neck, shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his mark. Job xvi. 12.

Whilst we set up our hopes here, we do not so seriously, as we ought, consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.
64. To set up. To raise by the voice.
My right eye itches, some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear;
I'll set up such a note as she shall hear. Dryden.
65. To set up. To advance; to propose to reception.
The authors that set up this opinion were not themselves satisfied with it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
66. To set up. To raise to a sufficient fortune.
In a soldier's life there's honour to be got, and one lucky hit sets up a man for ever. L'Estrange.
- To set v. n.
1. To fall below the horizon, as the sun at evening.
The sun was set. Gen. xxviii. 11.
Whereas the setting of the pleiades and seven stars is designed the term of Autumn and the beginning of Winter, unto some latitudes these stars do never set. Brown's Vulgar Err.
That sun once set, a thousand meaner stars
Gave a dim light to violence and wars. Waller.
Now the latter watch of wailing night,
And setting stars, to kindly rest invite. Dryden's En.
Not thicker billows beat the Libyan main,
When pale Orion fops in wintry rain,
Than stand these troops. Dryden's En.
My eyes no object met,
But distant skies that in the ocean set. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
The Julian eagles here their wings display,
And there like setting stars the Decur lay. Garth's Ovid.
2. To be fixed hard.
A gathering and ferring of the spirits together to resist, maketh the teeth to set hard one against another. Bacon.
3. To be extinguished or darkened, as the sun at night.
Abijah could not see; for his eyes were set, by reason of his age. 1 Kings xiv. 4.

SET

pointed, set forward with Solymian's ambassador towards Constantinople. Kneller's History of the Turks.
8. To catch birds with a dog that set them, that is, lies down and points them out; and with a large net.
When I go a hawking or setting, I think myself beholden to him that assures me, that in such a field there is a covey of partridges. Boyle.
9. To plant, not sow.
In gardening ne'er this rule forget,
To sow dry, and set wet. Old Proverb.
10. It is commonly used in conversation for sit, which, though undoubtedly barbarous, is sometimes found in authors.
If they set down before's, fore they remove;
Bring up your army. Shakespeare.
If he sets industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him. Hammond.
12. To set about. To fall to; to begin.
We find it most hard to convince them, that it is necessary now, at this very present, to set about it: we are thought a little too hot and hasty, when we press wicked men to leave their sins to-day, as long as they have so much time before them to do it in. Calamy's Sermons.
How preposterous is it, never to set about works of charity, whilst we ourselves can see them performed? Atterbury.
13. To set in. To fix in a particular state.
When the weather was set in to be very bad, I have taken a whole day's journey to see a gallery furnished by great masters. Addison's Spectator.
As November set in with keen frosts, so they continued through the whole of that month, without any other alteration than freezing with more or less severity, as the winds changed. Ellis's Voyage.
A storm accordingly happened the following day; for a southern monsoon began to set in. Gulliver's Travels.
14. To set on or upon. To begin a march, journey, or enterprize.

its activity only set out at our nativity, and began not rather in the womb. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
17. To set out. To begin a journey.
The dazzling lustre to abate,
He set not out in all his pomp and state,
Clad in the midst of lightning. Addison.
18. To set out. To begin a journey.
At their setting out they must have their commission from the king. Bacon.
I shall put you in mind where you promised to set out, or begin your first stage. Hammond.
Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning-hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and ere mid-day arriv'd
In Eden. Milton's Parad. Lost.
My soul then mov'd the quicker pace;
Your first set out, mine reach'd her in the race. Dryden.
These doctrines, laid down for foundations of any science, were called principles, as the beginnings from which we must set out, and look no farther backwards. Locke.

SET

- He that sets out upon weak legs will not only go further, but grow stronger too, than one who with firm limbs only has still. Locke.
For these reasons I shall set out for London to-morrow.

 For your good host. Shakefp. K. Lear.
 4. Obscure place.
 To the secret shadow I retire,
 To pay my penance till my years expire. Dryd.
 5. Dark part of a picture.
 A shadow is a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lighted body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light spreading itself into the air or medium proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forfake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkness by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves. Peacocks.
 After great lights there must be great shadows. Dryden.
 6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight; a ghost; a spirit;
 or shade.

 A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Pontnu.
 2. Not brightly luminous.
 More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.
 3. Faintly representative; typical.
 When they see Law can discover sin, but not remove Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
 The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
 Some blood more precious must be paid for man. Milt.
 4. Unsubstantial; unreal.
 Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addis.
 5. Dark; opaque.
 By command, e're yet dim night
 Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 SHAD'Y. adj. [from shade.]
 1. Full of shade; milly gloomy.
 The waken'd bird
 Sings darkling, and in shadowy covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,
 And Amarillis fills the shady groves. Dryd.

 Already has a fever got,
 Too late begins those shafts to shun,
 Which Phoebus thro' his veins has shot. Walton.
 They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark. More.
 So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow
 With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below: Dryd.
 O'er thee the secret shaft
 That wafts at midnight, or th'undreaded hour
 Of noon, flies harmless. Thomson.
 2. [Shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.
 They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length. Crew.
 The fulminating damp, upon its ascension, gives a crack like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft. Woodward.
 Suppose a tube, or as the miners call it, a shaft; were sunk from the surface of the earth to the center. Arbutnot.
 3. Any thing strait; the spire of a church.
 Præfite to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple. Peacocks.
 SHAG. n. f. [reacep, Saxon.]

 In batallous array, while Volga's stream Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad
 Her borders; on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.
 2. Rough; rugged.
 They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,
 Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops Uplifting bore them in their hands. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 There, where very desolation dwells,
 By grots and caverns shaggy with horrid shades,
 She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
 Be it not done in pride. Milt.
 Through Eden went a river large,
 Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
 Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.
 How would the old king smile
 To see you weigh the paws when tip'd with gold,
 And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders. Addis.
 Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn,
 Ye grots and caverns shaggy with horrid thorn. Pope.
 SHAGREEN. n. f. [chagrin, French.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.

 He shrank of succours, and in deep despair,
 Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryden.
- SHAKE. n. s. [from the verb.]
 1. Concussion.
 If that thy fame with ev'ry toy be pos'd,
 'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;
 But the great soldier's honour was compos'd
 Of thicker stuff, which could endure a shake;
 Wisdom picks friends; civility plays the rest,
 A toy shunn'd cleanly passeth with thee best. Herbert.
 The freeholder is the basis of all other titles; this is the

 of many kind shakes of the hand. Addison.
 SHAKE. n. s. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.
 Go then, the guilty at thy will chastise,
 He said; the shake of the earth replies. Pope's Odyssey.
 SHAKE. n. s. [Corrupted, I think, for shell.] A husk; the case of seeds in siliquious plants.
 Behold you poor and starv'd band,
 And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
 Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shakespeare.
 SHALL. v. defective. [reel, Sax. is originally Lease, or to ought.
 In Chaucer, the faillie I shall to God, means the faillie I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, deit, deit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have shall, and the Islanders shall, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.
- The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will: but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.
1. I SHALL love. It will so happen that I must love; I am resolved to love.
 2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love? Will it happen that I must love?
 3. THOU SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love: [in poetry or solemn diction] it will happen that thou must love.
 4. SHALT thou love? Will it happen that thou must love?
 Will it be permitted to thee to love?
 5. HE SHALL love. It will happen that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.
 It is a mind, that shall remain a poison where it is.
 — Shall remain!
 Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you
 His absolute shall? Shakespeare.
 See Romulus the great:
 This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear,
 And like his fire in arms he shall appear. Dryden's En.
 That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded; and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hemond's Fundamentals.
6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? In solemn language, Will it happen that he must love?
 7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.
 SHALLOON. n. s. A light woollen stuff.
 In blue shalloon shall Hannibal be clad.
 And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.
 SHALLOP. n. s. [chaleupe, French.] A small boat.
 You were resolv'd, after your arrival into Oroonoke, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have Sir John Fearn's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.
- There with your shallop stay:
 The game's not lost; I have one card to play. Waller.
 Our hero set
 In a small shallop, fortune in his debt;
 So near a hope of crowns and scepters, more Than ever Priam, when he flourish'd, wore. Waller.
- SHALLOW. adj. [This word is probably compounded of shad and low.]
 1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.
 I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelley and shallow, a death that I shudder. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
 That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food. Bacon.
 The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallower in his days, and would in process of time become a firm land. Drogon's Vulgar Errours.
 I am made a shallow for'd stream,
 Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scum'd,
 And all my faults expos'd. Dryden's All for Love.
 Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
 The bottom did the top appear.
 In shallow furrows vines securely grow. Dryden.

SHA

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound; not very knowing or wise; empty; trifling; futile;illy.
 I'll shew my mind, Shakespeare.
 According to my shallow simple skill.
 This is a very shallow monster:
 Afraid of him? A very shallow monster,
 The man 'th' moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shak.
 The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Britaigne. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
 Deep veft in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.
 One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest. Addison.
3. Not deep of sound.
 If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the found perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring. Bacon.
 SHALLOW. n. s. [from the adjective.] A shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.
 I could not see the sandy hour-glass run,
 But I should think of shallow and of flats;
 And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
 Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
 To kiss her burial. Shakespeare.
 A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallow of gravel. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Having but newly left those grammatical flats and shallow, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milt.
 You that so oft have sounded
 And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
 And shallow of his heart, should need no instruments
 To advance your ends. Denham.
 In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallow. Burnet.
 He sounds and fathoms him, to find
 The shallow of his soul. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
- The wary Dutch
 Behind their treacherous shallow now withdraw,
 And there lay snares to catch the British host. Dryden.
 Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
 Dash'd on the shallow of the moving land,
 And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land. Dryd. En.
 Their spaw being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallow. Ray on the Creation.
 With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct, he may decline both rocks and shallow. Norris.
 The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallow, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
 SHALLOWBRAINED. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.
 It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men to see a company of lewd shallowbrained buffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. Smith.
 SHALLOWLY. adv. [from shallow.]
 1. With no great depth.
 The load lieth open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Carver.
 2. Simply; foolishly.
 Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
 Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence:
 Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd fray. Shakespeare.
- SHALLOWNESS. n. s. [from shallow.]
 1. Want of depth.
 2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; fillinefs; emptiness.
 By it do all things live their measur'd hour:
 We cannot ask the thing which is not there,
 Blaming the shallowness of our request. Herbert.
 I cannot wonder enough at the shallow and impertinent zeal of the vulgar fort in Druiua, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security. Hewel.
- SHALM. n. s. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.
 Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readinefs to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the found of a shalm or hoboy. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
- SHALT. Second person of shall.
 TO SHAM. v. n. [shammi, Welsh, to cheat.]
 1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences. A low word.
 Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and sham'd into a conviction. L'Estrange.

SHA

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.
 We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.
 Then all your wits that fear and sham,
 Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
 From whom I jests and puns purloin,
 And filly put them off for mine,
 Fond to be thought a country wit. Prior.
- SHAM. n. s. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.
 No sham so gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatical and inquisitive. L'Estrange.
 It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be affixed with the shams of astrological judgments. L'Estrange.
 He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for. Locke.
- That in the sacred temple needs would try Without a fire th' unheated gums to fry, Believe who will the solemn sham, not I. Addison.
- SHAM. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.
 Never join the fray,
 Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.
- SHAMBLE. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology. Scannagha, Ital.]
 1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.
 Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shamble of the parliament-house. Shak. H. VI.
 I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
 — Oh, ay, as summer-flies are in the shamblies,
 That quicken ev'n with blowing. Shakespeare.
 He warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to the shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled. Arbuthnot.
2. It is here improperly used.
 When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shamblies of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other. Watts.
- SHAMBLING. adj. [See SCAMBLING.] Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.
 By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona. Dryd. Span. Fryar.
 So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tricks,
 With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
 With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
 And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smith.
- SHAME. n. s. [reame, Saxon; schamte, Dutch.]
 1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.
 Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lye,
 And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye. Fa. Qu.
 Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
 — Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
 Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
 And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:
 My charity is outrage, life my shame;
 And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage. Shak. R. III.
 Hide, for shame,
 Romans, your grandfires images,
 That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.
 In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.
2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.
 The more shame for him that he sends it me;
 For I have heard him say a thousand times,
 His Julia gave it him at his departure. Shakespeare.
 Aaron had made them naked unto their shame amongst their enemies. Ex. xxxii. 25.
 God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.
- This jest was first of the other house's making;
 And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking;
 For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
 Under the shelter of so broad a shield.
 O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy
 The scheme of all our happiness destroy? Pope's Odyssey.
3. Reproach.
 A foul shame is upon the thief. Excus. v. 14.
 Applause
 Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
 Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.
- TO SHAME. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To make ashamed; to fill with shame.
 To tell thee of whom deriv'd,
 Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless. Sh.
 If thou hast power to raise him, bring him hither,
 And I've power to shame him hence:
 Oh, while you live tell truth and shame the devil. Shakespeare.
 Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
 The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleveland.
 Despoil'd

S H A

Despoil'd
Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable. Ad. Hen.
What hurt can there be in all the flanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence to shame us into the glories of the next. South.
Were there but one righteous man in the world, he would hold up his head with confidence and honour; he would shame
the world, and not the world him. South.
He in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it let him free. Dryden.
The coward bore the man immortal spite,
Who sham'd him out of madness into flight. Dryden.
Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through;
He spins the slight self-pleasing thread a-new. Pope.
2. To disgrace.
Certes, sir knights, ye been too much to blame;
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,
And with foul cowardice his carcass shame. Fairy Queen.
So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse. Milton.
To SHAME. v. n. To be ashamed.
Great shame it is, thing to divine in view,
Made for to be the world's most ornament,
To make the bait her gazers to embrew;
Good shames to be to all an instrument. Spenser.
Sham'd thou not, knowing whence thou art exalted,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart? Shakespeare.
To the trunk of it authors give such a magnitude, as shame to repeat. Raleigh's History of the World.
Auster spy'd him,
Cruel Auster thither hy'd him;
And with the rush of one rude blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to waste
All his leaves, so fresh, so sweet,
And lay them trembling at his feet. Crauw.
SHAMEFACED. adj. [shame and face.] Modest; bashful; easily put out of countenance.
Philoclea, who blushing and withal smiling, making shame- facedness pleasing, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.
Confidence is a blushing shamefaced spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills one full of obstacles. Shak. R. III.
A man may be shamefaced, and a woman modest, to the degree of scandalous. L'Estrange.
Your shamefaced virtue shunn'd the people's praise,
And senate's honours. Dryden.
From this time we may date that remarkable turn in the behaviour of our fashionable Englishmen, that makes them shamefaced in the exercise of those duties which they were wont into the world to perform. Addison's Freeholder.
SHAMEFACEDLY. adv. [from shamefaced.] Modestly; bashfully.
SHAMEFACEDNESS. n. f. [from shamefaced.] Modesty; bashfulness; timidity.
Dorus, when he had sung this, having had all the while a free beholding of the fair Pamela, could well have spared such horour, and defended the assault he gave unto her face with bringing a fair stain of shamefacedness into it. Sidney.
Why wonder ye?
Fair sir, at that which ye so much embrace?
You shamefaced are, but shamefacedness itself is free. Fa. Qu.
None but fools, out of shamefacedness, hide their ulcers, which, if shown, might be healed. Dryden's Duresser.
SHAMEFUL. adj. [shame and full.] Disgraceful; ignominious;

And came to shameful end. Fairy Queen.
For this he shall live hated, be blasphem'd,
Seiz'd on by force, judg'd, and to death condemn'd,
A shameful and accurs'd! Milton.
His naval preparations were not more surprising than his quick and shameful retreat: for he returned to Carthage with only one ship, having fled without striking one stroke. Arbut.
The knave of diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins, O shameful chance! the queen of hearts. Pope.
SHAMEFULLY. adv. [from shameful.] Disgracefully; ignominiously; infamously; reproachfully.
None but that saw, quoth he, would ween for truth,
How shamefully that maid he did torment. Fairy Queen.
But I his holy secret
Presumptuously have publish'd, impiously, Weakly at least, and shamefully. Milton's Agonistes.
Would shamefully fail in the last act in this contrivance of the nature of man? More.
Those who are ready enough to confess him, both in judgment and profession, are, for the most part, very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings. South's Sermons.

S H A

SHAMELESS. adj. [from shame.] Wanting shame; wanting modesty; impudent; frontless; immodest; audacious.
To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Beyond imagination is the wrong
That the this day hath, shameless, thrown on me. Shaksp.
The shameless denial heretofore by some of their friends, and the more shameless justification by some of their flatterers, makes it needful to exemplify, which I had rather forbear. Ral.
God deliver the world from such hucksters of souls, the very flame of religion, and the shameless subverters of morality. South's Sermons.
Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad abandon'd critics too. Pope.
SHAMELESSLY. adv. [from shameless.] Impudently; auda-ciously; without shame.

5. It is now used in low conversation for manner.
SHAPELESS. adj. [from shape.] Wanting regularity of form; wanting symmetry of dimensions.
You are born
To set a form upon that indig'nt,
Which he hath left to shapeless and so rude. Shakespeare.
He is deformed, crooked, old and fere;
Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless ev'ry where. Shakespeare.
What fools were here,
Disguis'd like Mulecivites in shapeless gear? Shakespeare.
Thrice had I lov'd thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipping'd be. Donne.
Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand,
Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand;
A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight,
Like forms in clouds, or visions of the night! Pope.
Some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice. Pope.
SHAPELESSNESS. n. f. [from shapeless.] One who undertakes to improve the form of the body. A burlesque word.

There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phœdria's fleet bark, over that per'ulous shard. Fa. Queen.
4. A sort of fish.
SHARDBORN. adj. [shard and born.] Born or produced among broken stones or pots. Perhaps shard in Shakespeare may signify the sheaths of the wings of insects.
Ere to black Hecate's fummons
The shardborn beetle with his drowly hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare.
SHARDED. adj. [from shard.] Inhabiting shards.
Often shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
To SHARE. v. n. [precare, reynan, Saxon.]
1. To divide; to part among many.
Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you. Shakespeare.
Any man may make trial of his fortune; provided he acknowledge the lord's right, by sharing out unto him a toll. Carew.
Well may he then to you his carcs impart,
And share his burden where he shares his heart. Dryden.

S H A

In the primitive times the advantage of priesthood was equally shared among all the order, and none of that character had any superiority. Calter.
Though the weight of a fallhood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations when it is shared among many. Addison's Spectator.
Suppose I share my fortune equally between my children and a stranger, will that unite them? Swift.
2. To partake with others.
The captain, half of whose soldiers are dead, and the other quarter never mulctured or seen, comes shortly to demand payment of his whole account; where, by good means of some great ones, and privy sharings with the officers of other some, he receiveth his debt. Spenser on Ireland.
In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land. Milton.
Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me. Dryden.
Wav'd by the wanton winds his banner flies;
All maiden white, and shares the people's eyes. Dryden.
This was the prince decreed
To share his sceptre. Dryden's Æn.
Not a love of liberty, nor thirst of honour,
Drew you thus far; but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns and plunder'd provinces. Addison's Cato.
All night it rains, the flocks return with day;
Great Jove with Cæsar shares his sov'reign sway. Logie.
3. To cut; to separate; to sheer. [From precan, Saxon.]
With swift wheel reverle deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side. Milton.

And the shar'd village hangs on equal sides. Dryden.
To SHARE. v. n. To have part; to have a dividend.
I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Had greater haste these sacred rites prepar'd,
Some guilty mouths had in your triumphs shar'd; Dryden.
But this untainted year is all your own.
A right of inheritance gave every one a title to share in the goods of his father. Leete.
This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.
SHARE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Part; allotment; dividend.
If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and befitting share,
Of that which lowly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some with vast excels. Milton.
They went a hunting, and every one to go share and share like in what they took. L'Estrange.
The subdivided territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince.
I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy:
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that the shall be mine. Dryden.
While fortune favours,

 Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel? Cleau.

Swords, by the lightning's subtle force diffill'd,
 And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd. Addison.

TO SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]
 TO SHEATH. }
 1. To inclose in a sheath or scabbard; to inclose in any case.
 This drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,
 Before 'tis sheath'd, shall give him peace and rest. Waller.

Those active parts of a body are of differing textures when sheath'd up, or wedged in amongst others in the texture of a concrete; and when extricated from these impediments. Boyle.
 In his hair one hand he wreaths,
 His sword, the other, in his bosom sheaths. Denham.

Is this her hate to him, his love to me?
 'Tis in my breast sheath'd her dagger now. Dryden.
 The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
 But in a bull's raw hide they sheath the right. Dryden.

The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground and sheath'd in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for rapine, extending them only when he leaps at the prey. Grew.

Other substances opposite to acrimony are called demulcent or mild; because they blunt or sheath those sharp salts as pease, and beans. Arbuthnot.

2. To fit with a sheath.
 There was no ink to colour Peter's hat,
 Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing. Shak.

 ton, which is that kind of gilded leather with which they use to embroider the Irish jackets. Spenser.

TO SHED. v. a. [precepan, Saxon.]
 1. To effuse; to pour out; to spill.
 The painful service, and the drops of blood Shed for my thankless country are requited
 But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shakespeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
 In all my miseries. Shakespeare.
 Without shedding of blood is no remission. Heb. ix. 22.
 For this is my blood which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. Matt. xxvi. 28.

Some think one gen'ral foul fills ev'ry brain,
 As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star.
 Around its entry nodding poppies grow,
 And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
 Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
 And passing, sheds it on the silent plains.
 You seem'd to mourn another lover dead,
 My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed. Dryden.

2. To shed. v. n. [sheep and bite.] To use petty thefts.
 Shew your knave's visage, with a pox to you; shew your sheepbiting face, and be hang'd. Shakespeare.
 SHEEPBITER. n. s. [from sheepbite.] A petty thief.
 His gate like a sheepbiter fleeing aside. Tusser.

Wouldst

SHE

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
 Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
 'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;
 The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
 These moss-grown domes with spire turrets crown'd,
 Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
 And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
 Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
 And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.

2. To scatter; to let fall.
 Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them betimes. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

So the returning year be blest,
 As his infant months bestow,
 Springing wreaths for William's brow;
 As his summer's youth shall shed
 Eternal sweets around Maria's head. Prior.

TO SHED. v. n. To let fall its parts.
 White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SHEED. n. s. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from shade.]
 1. A slight temporary covering.
 The first Aletes born in lowly sheed,
 Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bride. Fairfax.

Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
 With Jasper floor'd, and carved cedar ceil'd;
 Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell.
 Or sheed of reeds, which summer's heat repel. Sandys.

So all our minds with his conspire to grace
 The Genicles great apostle, and deface
 Those state-obscuring sheeds, that like a chain
 Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Walker.

In such a season born, when scarce a shed
 Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me
 From the bleak air. Parad. Regain'd.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheeds,
 With twining osters fence'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.
 An hospitable house they found,
 A homely shed; the roof, not far from ground
 Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound. Dryden.

Then out he steals, and finds where by the head,
 Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed. Betterton.
 Her various kinds by various fortunes led,
 Commence acquaintance, underneath a shed. Swift.

2. In composition. Effusion; as blood-shed.
 SHEDDER. n. s. [from shed.] A spiller; one who sheds.
 A shedder of blood shall surely die. Exek. xviii. 10.

SHEEN. } adj. [This was probably only the old pronunciation SHEENY. } of shime.] Bright; glittering; cheery. A word now not in use.

That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanc'd,
 Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
 To spoil her dainty corse to fair and sheen. Fa. Queen.

When he was all dight, he took his way
 Into the forest, that he might be seen
 Of the wild beasts, in his new glory sheen. Hulbert's Tale.

Now they never meet in grove or green,
 By fountain clear, or spangled star-light sheen. Shakespeare.
 Up arose each warrior bold and brave,
 Glittering in filed steel and armour sheen. Fairfax.

Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
 The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax.
 By the rusty fringed bank,
 Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
 My sliding chariot stays,
 Which set with agat, or the azure sheen,
 Of turquois blue, and emerald green. Milton.

Or did of late earth's sons besiege the wall
 Of sheeny heav'n. Milton.

SHEEN. n. s. [from the adjective.] Brightness; splendour.
 Mercy will fit between,
 Thron'd in celestial sheen. Milton.

Far above, in spangled sheen,
 Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son advanc'd,
 Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd. Milton.

SHEEP. n. s. plural likewise sheep. [precepan, Saxon; of which the plural was reep; sheep, Dutch.]

1. The animal that bears wool: remarkable for its usefulness and innocence.
 Fire the brambles, snare the birds, and steep
 In wholesome water-falls the fleecy sheep. Dryden.

Of substances there are two sorts of ideas; one of single substances, as they exist separately, as a man or sheep. Locke.
 2. In contempt. A foolish silly fellow. Amworth.

TO SHEEPBIT. v. n. [sheep and bite.] To use petty thefts.
 Shew your knave's visage, with a pox to you; shew your sheepbiting face, and be hang'd. Shakespeare.

SHEEPBITER. n. s. [from sheepbite.] A petty thief.
 His gate like a sheepbiter fleeing aside. Tusser.

Wouldst

SHE

sheepster come to some notable shame. Shakespeare.
There are political sheepstiers as well as pastoral, betrayers of public trusts, as well as of private. L'Estrange.
SHEEP'FOOT. n. f. [sheep and foot.] A little inclosure for sheep.
Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
From low farms, sheepsties and mills Inforce their charity. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
If cottage were in view, sheepstier or herd;
But cottage, herd, or sheepstier none he saw. Milton.
SHEEP'FO'LD. n. f. [sheep and fold.] The place where sheep are inclosed.

The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain,
The sheepfold scatter'd and the shepherd slain. Prior.
SHEEP'HOOK. n. f. [sheep and hook.] A hook fastened to a pole by which shepherds lay hold on the legs of their sheep.
The one carried a crozier of balm-wood, the other a pastoral staff of cedar like a sheep-hook. Bacon's New Atlantis.
If you dare think of deserting our charms,
Away with your sheephook, and take to your arms. Dryden.
SHEEP'ISH. adj. [from sheep.] Bashful; over-modest; timor-ously and meanly diffident.
Wanting change of company, he will, when he comes abroad, be a sheepish or conceited creature. Locke.
SHEEP'ISHNESS. n. f. [from sheepish.] Bashfulness; mean and timorous diffidence.

Thy gentry bleats, as if thy native cloth
Transus'd a sheepishness into thy story. Herbert.
Sheepishness and ignorance of the world, are not consequences of being bred at home. Locke.
Without success, let a man be never so hardy, he will have some degree of sheepishness. Grew.

Cast a sheep's eye behind you: in before me. Dryden.
SHEEPWALK. n. f. [sheep and walk.] Pasture for sheep.
He beheld a field,
Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and folds. Milt.

SHEER. adj. [sheer, Saxon.] Pure; clear; unmingled.
If the day, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying 't rogue in Christendom. Shak.
Sheer argument is not the talent of the man; little wrested sentences are the blades which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.

SHEER. adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once.
Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting sun,
Drop'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos. Milton.

The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite
Defending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.
Due entrance he did gain'd, and in contempt
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. Milton.

Receives her lord. Dryden.

3. Eaves. French; echette, Dutch. In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower fails to hale or round off the clew of the sail; but in topails they draw the sail close to the yard arms. Dist.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.

The little word behind the back, and undoing whisper, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, slackens the sail. Snelling.
Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden.

SHE

4. As much paper as is made in one body.
As much love in rhyme,
As could be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper, Shakespeare.
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shakespeare.
When I first put pen to paper, I thought all I should have to say would have been contained in one sheet of paper. Locke.

it from your sheet, and the solid cash you fold it for. Elton.
2. A sand bank in the sea; a rock under shallow water.
Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escaped the numerous rocks, sheets, and quick-sands. Boyle.

Near the sheets of Circe's shores they run,
A dangerous coast.
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of self Soon split him on the former sheet. Dryden.

He put it out again.
3. The plural is analogically sheets; Dryden has sheets, probably by negligence.
He seiz'd the helm, his fellows cheer'd,
Turn'd short upon the sheets and madly steer'd. Dryden.

SHEET. adj. [from sheet.]
1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.
Glides by the frown's cliffs a sheety coast,
Long infamous for ships and sailors lost,
And white with bones. Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage, perhaps rocky.
The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some so sheety that the corn hath much ado to fasten its root. Carew.

SHEET. n. f. [see, Saxon; sheet, Dutch.]
1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.
The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the sheet of the colipile, and the abyss as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierc'd thro' the sheet and reach'd the waters, it rarify'd them. Burn. Theor. of the Earth.
Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the sheet of the earth. Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.
Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a sheet,
And in their loose attires do swell. Econ. Johnf. Catiline.

Abition
Was to Neptune recommended;
Peace and plenty spread the sails;
Venus, in her sheet before him,
From the sands in safety bore him. Dryden's Allion.
The sheet served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its ineffectual sheet, is of the same shape as the cavity of the sheet. Woodward.

SHE

He, whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all times just, but when he sign'd the shell. Pope.
3. The covering of the seeds of filiquous plants.
Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants. Alutmit.

4. The covering of kernels.
Chang'd loves are but chang'd sorts of meat;
And when he hath the kernel eat,
Who doth not throw away the shell? Donne.

5. The covering of an egg.
I think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

6. The outer part of a house.
The marquis of Medina Sidonia made the shell of a house, that would have been a very noble building, had he brought it to perfection. Addison on Italy.

7. It is used for a musical instrument in poetry, from testudo, Latin; the first lyre being said to have been made by framing strings over the shell of a tortoise.
Less than a god they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell,
That spoke so sweetly. Dryden.

8. The superficial part.
So devout are the Romanists about this outward shell of religion, that if an altar be moved, or a stone of it broken, it ought to be reconsecrated. Ayliffe's Paragon.
TO SHELL. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out of the shell;
to strip of the shell.
TO SHELL. v. n.

in with a pond. Martinet's Husbandry.
SHELLFISH. n. f. [shell and fish.] Fish involved with a hard covering, either testaceous, as oysters, or crustaceous, as lobsters.

The shells, being found, were to like those they saw upon their shores, that they never questioned but that they were the crustace of shellfish, and once belonged to the sea. Woodward.
SHELLY. adj. [from shell.]
1. Abounding with shells.
The ocean rollings, and the shelly shores,
Beautiful objects, shall delight no more. Prior.

2. Consisting of shells.
The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men and all animals were bred in some warm moisture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as lobsters; and so continued 'till their shelly prisons, growing dry and breaking, made way for them. Bentley.
SHELLTER. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is unknown:
Salm deduces it from shell, Davies from scyll, a shield, Saxon.]

1. A cover from any external injury or violence.
We hear this fearful tempest fings
Yet seek no shellter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare. R. II.
They with'd the mountains now might be again Thrown on them, as a shellter from his ire. Milton.

Heroes of old, when wounded, shellter sought;
But he who meets all dangers with disdain,
Even in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And steeples high flood prept upon the main. Dryden.
They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shellter from rain, when they have a lover in company. Dryd.
The healing plant shall aid,

From frowns a shellter, and from heat a shade. Pope.
2. A protector; a defender; one that gives security.
Thou hast been a shellter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy. Pf. lxi. 3.
3. The state of being covered; protection; security.

Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
Which shade and shellter from the hill derives,
While the kind river wealth and beauty gives. Denham.
TO SHELLTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover from external violence.
We beloug'd the deep to shellter us.
Those ruins shellter'd once his sacred head,
When he from Worcester's fatal battle fled,
Watch'd by the genius of this royal place. Dryden.

2. To defend; to protect; to succour with refuge; to harbour.
What endless honour shall you gain,
To save and shellter Troy's unhappy train. Dryden's En.

3. To betake to cover.
They shellter'd themselves under a rock.
Comfort thyself with such thoughts, chiefly when all earthly comforts fail thee: then do thou particularly retreat to those considerations, and shellter thyself under them. Atterbury.

4. To cover from notice.
In vain I strive to check my growing flame,
Or shellter passion under friendship's name;
You saw my heart. Prior.

Where piercing winds blow sharp. Keats's Jove Shore.
SHELLING. adj. [from shell.] Sloping; inclining; having de-clivity.

Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built to shellter, that one cannot climb it,
Without apparent hazard of his life. Shakespeare.
Amidst the brake a hollow den was found,
With rocks and shellter arches vaulted round. Addison.

SHELLY. adj. [from shell.] Shallow; rocky; full of banks.
I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelly and shallow. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
TO SHEND. v. a. preter. and part. pass. shent. [scenden, Saxon; shenden, Dutch.]

1. To ruin; to spoil; to mischief.
Provide for thy wife, or else look to be shent,
Good milkcow for Winter, another for Lent. Tusser.
Shepherds, should it not shent
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse Of Rosalind, that Colin made? Spenser.

Such a dream I had of dire portent,
That much I fear my body will be shent;
It bodes I shall have wars. Dryden.

2. To disgrace; to degrade; to blame.
Debateful strife, and cruel enmity,
The famous name of knighthood foully shend. Fa. Queen.
Sore bruised with the fall, he flow uprose,
And all enraged thus, thus him loudly shent.

Dilect knights, whose coward courage chose
To wreak itself on beast.
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites,
How in my words soever he be shent,
To give them seals never my foul consent. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might we move
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.
Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
'Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd. Prior.
SHEPHERDESS. n. f. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.

She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years; but discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him the first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction. Sidney.

These your unusual weeds, to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
She like some shepherdess did shew,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side. Dryden.
His doric dialect has an incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in her country rustic.

 With hearts more proof than ſhields. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

2. Defence; protection.
 The terror of the Trojan field,
 The Grecian honour, ornament, and ſhield,
 High on a pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd. Dryden.

TO SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To cover with a ſhield.
 2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

Were't my fitness to let these hands obey my boiling blood,
 They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
 Thy flesh and bones: how'er
 A woman's shape doth ſhield thee. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
 To see the son the vanquish'd father ſhield. Dryden.

Hear one that comes to ſhield his injur'd honour,
 And guard his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

 As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to ſhift me. Shak. Henry IV.

7. To SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.
 The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserving of this care, must be ſhifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will ſhift it off from their own gain. Locke.
 By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to ſhift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salution is promised. Rogers's Sermon.

SHIFTER. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.
 She redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other ſhift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocence against violence. Shak.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
 I'll find a thousand ſhifts to get away. Shakeſp. K. John.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made ſhift to move up and down in the water. Moré's Antidote against Aduſin.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme ſhift
 How to regain my fever'd company,
 Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo,
 To give me answer from her mossy couch. Milton.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a ſhift somewhat to legitimate the abuse. L'Estrange.

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make ſhift without it. Addison.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable ſhift to reduce them to classes. Baker.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last recourse.
 The very custom of seeking for particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked ſhifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek. Hobbes.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a ſhift of ignorance. Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick;
 So true, that he was awkward at a trick;
 For little souls on little ſhifts rely. Dryden.

3. Fraud; artifice; stratagem.
 Know ye not Ulysses' ſhifts?
 Their swords less danger carry than their gifts. Denham.

4. Evasion; elusory practice.
 As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any ſhift, be it never so slight, whereby to escape out of the hands of present contradiction, they are never at a stand. Hobbes.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautious and wily-headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that they would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and fly ſhifts. Spenser.

Here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements: never seek for ſhifts and evasions from worldly afflictions: this is your reward, if you perform it;
 this your doom, if you decline it. South.

5. A woman's linen.
SHEFTER. n. f. [from ſhift.] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice. For

For the poor ſhifts irrational, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such cloathing. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SHILLING. n. f. [ſceylling, Sax. and Erſe; ſchilling, Dut.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.
 Five of these pence made their ſhillings, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of these ſhillings made their pound, and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of King Alfred. Candee's Remains.

The very same ſhillings may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand ſhill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it: I don't stand ſhill-I-shall-I then; if I say't, I'll do't. Congrave's Way of the World.

SHILL. v. a. [from ſhill.] Not familiarly; not frankly.
SHILL. n. f. [ſceina, Saxon; ſchillen, German.] The forepart of the leg.

I thrust my ſhill the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The ſhill bone, from the knee to the wrist, is made by tha-dowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peacock.

His leg, then broke,
 Had got a deputy of oak;
 For when a ſhill in fight is cropt,
 The knee with one of timber's propt. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come,
 To know if any one's at home,
 We knock; so one must kick your ſhill,
 Ere he can find your soul's within. Anonymous.

 Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the Springs,
 Or swims along the fluid atmosphere,
 Once brightest ſhined this child of heat and air. Dunciad.

6. To be eminent or conspicuous.
 If there come truth from them,
 As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches ſhine,
 Why, by the verities on thee made good,
 May they not be my oracles as well? Shakeſp.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fancied sight
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person ſhined.
 So clear, as in no face with more delight.
 Cato's soul
 Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks;
 While winning mildness and attractive smiles
 Dwell in her looks, and, with becoming grace, Soften the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison.

The reformation, in its first establishment, produced its proper fruits, and distinguishing the whole age with ſhining instances of virtue and morality. Addison's Freeholder.

The courtier smooth, who forty years had ſhined.
 An humble servant to all human kind.

 question of a man hesitating. To stand ſhill-I-shall-I

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence. Shaksp. Hamlet.
In Portugal men spent with age, so as they cannot hope for above a year of life, ship themselves away in a Brazil fleet.

A single leaf can waft an army o'er,
Or ship off senators to some distant shore. Pope.
The canal that runs from the sea into the Arno gives a convenient carriage to all goods that are to be shipped off. Addis.
SHIPBOARD, n. f. [ship and board.] See BOARD.
1. This word is seldom used but in adverbial phrases: a ship- board, on shipboard, in a ship.
Let him go on shipboard, and the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard. Bramhall.

Friend,
What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end? Dryden.
Ovid, writing from on shipboard to his friends, excused the faults of his poetry by his misfortunes. Dryden.
2. The plank of a ship.
They have made all thy shipboards of fir-trees, and brought cedars from Lebanon to make masts. Ezek. xxvii. 5.
SHIPBOY, n. f. [ship and boy.] Boy that serves in a ship.
Few or none know me: if they did,
This shipboy's semblance hath disguised me quite. Shaksp.
SHIPMAN, n. f. [ship and man.] Sailor; seaman.
I myself have the very points they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I 'd shipman's card. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Hiram sent in the navy shipmen that had knowledge of the sea. 1 Kings ix. 27.

SHIPMASTER, n. f. Master of the ship.
The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, what meanest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God. Jon. i. 6.
SHIPPING, n. f. [from ship.]
1. Vessels of navigation.
Before Caesar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides. Raleigh.
The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea. Temple.

Fishes first to shipping did impart;
Their tail the rudders, and their head the prow. Dryden.
2. Passage in a ship.
They took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus. Jo. vi. 24.

SHIPWRECK, n. f. [ship and wreck.]
1. The destruction of ships by rocks or shelves.
Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the worst. Waller.
We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks. L'Estrange.
This sea war cost the Carthaginians five hundred quinque-renes, and the Romans seven hundred, including their ship- wrecks. Arbutnot.

2. The parts of a shattered ship.
They might have it in their own country, and that by gar-thering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman treasures. Dryden.
3. Destruction; miscarriage.
Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck. 1 Tim. i.
To SHIPWRECK, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or shallows.
Whence the fun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking horrid and direful thunders break. Shaksp.
2. To make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.
Thou that can'st still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gulfs
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts. Prior.
A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little pagan monument of two persons who were shipwrecked. Addis.

3. To throw by loss of the vessel.
Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me. Shaksp.
SHIPWRIGHT, n. f. [ship and wright.] A builder of ships.
Why such imprints of shipwrights, whose fore talk
Does not divide the Sunday from the week. Shaksp.
A miserable shame it were for our shipwrights, if they did not exceed all others in the setting up of our royal ships. Ral.
Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our sea-port towns. Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians. Arbutnot.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore,
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, 'till it scoops it out. Pope.
SHIRE, n. f. [from, from scire, to divide, Sax. shire, Erie.]

A division of the kingdom; a county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire,
As two broad beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames far off to every shire. Fa. Quern.

1. The noble youths from distant shires resort. Prior.
SHIRT, n. f. [shirts, Danish; sejre, sejre, Saxon.] The under linen garment of a man.
Shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reck as a sacrifice. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily. Shaksp. Henry V.

When we lay next to what we hold most dear,
Like Hercules, envenom'd shirts we wear,
And cleaving milkheifs. Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts. Addis on Italy.

To SHIRT, v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to clothe as in a shirt.
Ah! for so many souls, as but this morn
Were cloth'd with flesh, and warm'd with vital blood,
But naked now, or shirtd but with air. Dryden.

SHIRTLESS, adj. [from shirt.] Wanting a shirt.
Linsey-woolsey brothers,
Grave maimers! sleeveless fomes, and shirtless others. Pope.
SHITTAN, n. f. A sort of precious wood, of which Myst SHITTIM, n. f. made the greatest part of the tables, altars, and planks belonging to the tabernacle. The wood is hard, tough, smooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful. R. grows in Arabia. Cabnet.

I will plant in the wilderness the shittab-tree. Is. xli. 19.
Bring me an offering of badgers skins and shittim-wood. Ex.
SHITTECK, n. f. [Commonly and perhaps as properly shitt- thock.] Of little or little the etymology is doubtful; Sin- ner derives it from shutten, German, to shake; or sear, Saxon, to throw. He thinks it is called a cock from its feathers. Perhaps it is properly shittcock, a cork driven to and fro, as the instrument in weaving, and softened by frequent and rapid utterance from cock to cock. A cork stuck with feathers, and driven by players from one to another with bat-tledors.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shittcock, or the creaking of a jack, will do his business. Culter.

SHIVE, n. f. [shyve, Dutch.]

1. A slice of bread.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to fical a shive. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.
2. A thick splinter, or lamina cut off from the main substance.
Shavings made by the plane are in some things differing from those shives, or thin and flexible pieces of wood that are obtained by borers. Boyle.

To SHIVER, v. n. [schauern, German.] To quake; to tremble; to shudder, as with cold or fear.
Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge, and make all the body shiver. Bacon.
What religious pally's this,
Which makes the boughs divert their bliss?
And that they might her footsteps stray,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe. Cleaveland.

Why stand we longer shivering under fear?
The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in. Dryden.
He described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shiver'd every joint. Addis.

Give up Latus to the realms of day,
Whose ghost, yet shivering on Cocytus' sand, Expects its passage to the farther strand. Pope.
Prometheus is laid
On icy Caucasus to shiver,
While vultures eat his growing liver. Swift.

To SHIVER, v. n. [from shive.] To fall at once into many parts or shives.

Had'st thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air
So many fathom down precipitating, Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg. Shaksp. King John.
Upon the breaking and shivering of a great state, you may be sure to have wars.

The natural world, should gravity once cease, or be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms. Waller.
To SHIVER, v. a. To break by one act into many parts; to shatter.
The ground with shiver'd armour strown.
Show'rs of granado's rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murderous bowels; fragments of steel

That 'till the father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakespeare.
2. Maliciously; sly; cunning; more artful than good.
It was a shrewd saying of the old monks, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.
A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist. Addison.
Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.
3. Bad; ill-betokening.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South's Sermon.
4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.
Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune. Shakespeare.
When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South's Sermon.
No enemy is so depicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

all who affected novelties adhere to that side. King Charles.
Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors sakes, before they be well understood. Digby on Bodies.

Not yet so dully deperate
To side against ourselves with fate;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Hubbard.
The princess differ and divide;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side. Granville.
It is pleasant to see a verse of an old poet revolting from its original sense, and siding with a modern subject. Addis.
All sides in parties, and begin th' attack. Pope.
Those who pretended to be in with the principles upon which her majesty proceeded, either absented themselves where the whole cause depended, or sided with the enemy. Swift.
The equitable part of those who now side against the court, will probably be more temperate. Swift.
SIDEBOARD. n. f. [side and board.] The side table on which conveniences are placed for those that eat at the other table.
At a stately sideboard by the wine
That fragrant smell diffus'd. Milt. Paradise Regain'd.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were dress'd,
No sweating flaves with massive dishes press'd. Dryden.

The snow white damask ensigns are display'd,
And glittering falcons on the sideboard laid.
The shining sideboard, and the burnish'd plate,
Let other ministers, great Anne, require.
Scipio Africanus brought from Carthage to Rome, in silver vessels, to the value of 11955*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* a quantity exceeded afterwards by the sideboards of many private tables.

SIDEROX, n. f. [side and box.] Seat for the ladies on the side of the theatre.

Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux?
Why bows the sidebox from its inmost rows?

SIDELY, n. f. An insect.
From a rough whitish maggot, in the intestinum rectum of horses, the sidefly proceeds.

SIDLE, v. n. [from side.] To go with the body the narrowest way.

The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and sidling, and queezing his body.

I passed very gently and sidling through the two principal streets.

A fellow nailed up maps in a gentleman's closet, some sidling, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the panels.

SIDELONG, adj. [side and long.] Lateral; oblique; not in front; not direct.

She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as the spoke, and, like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do.

The deadly wound is in thy soul:
When thou a tempting harlot do'st behold,
And when she casts on thee a sidelong glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dance?

The reason of the planets motions in curve lines is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or sidelong impulse.

The kifs snatch'd hasty from the sidelong maid.

SIDELONG, adv.
1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit; not in opposition.
As if on earth

Winds under ground, or waters, forcing way,
Sidelong had pull'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines.

As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sidelong to seize.

2. On the side.
If it prove too wet, lay your pots sidelong; but shade those which blow from the afternoon sun.

SIDELONG, adj. [from side, Latin.] Starry; astral.
These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produc'd
Like change on sea, and land; sidelong blast, Vapour and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent!

The muck gives
Sure hopes of racy wine, and in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offsprings, that defies
The vernal nippings and cold sidelong blasts.

SIDERATED, adj. [from sideratus, Latin.] Blasted; planet struck.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black; the radical moisture, or vital sulphur, suffering an extinction.

SIDERATION, n. f. [sideration, French; sideratio, Latin.]
A sudden mortification, or, as the common people call it, a blast; or a sudden deprivation of sense, as in an apoplexy.

The contagious vapour of the very eggs produce a mortification or sideration in the parts of plants on which they are laid.

SIDESADDLE, n. f. [side and saddle.] A woman's seat on horseback.

SIDESMAN, n. f. [side and man.] An assistant to the church-warden.

A gift of such goods, made by them with the consent of the *side*men or vestry, is void.

SIDEWAYS, adv. [from side and way, or wise.] Laterally;
SIDEWISE, adv. on one side.

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew the wears,
Prove to be prefiguring tears.

If in the third experiment the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction *side-

SIG

SIGEE, n. f. [sigee, French.]
1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a league.
Our cattle's strength

Will laugh a sigee to scorn: here let them lie.
'Till famine eat them up.

It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long sigee than by assault to take the town.

The more I see pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful sigee
Of contraries.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.
Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong sigee unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair.

3. [Sigee, French.] Scat; throne. Obsolete.
Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty sigee began these words aloud to sound.

4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.
I fetch my life and being
From men of royal sigee.

Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest sigee.

5. [Sigee, French.] Stool.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permanent parts, as the mouths of the inferiatics, and accompaneth the inconvertible portion unto the sigee.

SIGEE, v. a. [sigee, Fr. from the noun.] To besiege. A word not now in use.
Him he had long oppress'd with tort,
And fast imprison'd in sigee fort.

SIGEE, n. f. [from sigi.] Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a scarce.

Thy counsel
Falls now into my ears as profilets
As water in a sigee.

In a sigee I'll thither fail,
And like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do.

An innocent found a sigee, and presently fell to stopping the holes.

If life funk through you like a leaky sigee,
Accuse yourself you'd not while you might.

1. To separate by a sieve.
In the sigee of such favour all that came out could not be expected to be pure meal, but must have a mixture of pcar and bran.

2. To separate; to part.
When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show.

3. To examine; to try.
We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal.

All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all Christian churches ought to have their elderships.

I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

As near as I could sift him on that argument.
Opportunity I here have had To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
Proof against all temptation as a rock
Of adamant.

One would think, that every member who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects.

SIGTER, n. f. [from sigi.] He who sifts.
Sig was used by the Saxons for victory: Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper; and almost in the same sense are Nicolas, Nicomyschus, Nicander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincencius, &c.

SIGH, v. n. [from sigh, Saxon; sichten, Dutch.]
To emit the breath audibly, as in grief.
I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors.

He sigh'd deeply in his spirit, and faith, why doth this generation seek after a sign?

For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy will I arise.

Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slippery thrones were plac'd,
And chafing, sigh to think themselves are chas'd.

The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the fivains, and sighs for one.

Thus sigh'd he away the melancholy night.
To SIGH, v. a. To lament; to mourn. Not in use.
Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate.

SIGH, n. f. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.
Full often has my heart swollen with keeping my sighs imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes, turned back to drown my heart.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.
What a sigh is there! The heart is forcibly charg'd.
Laughings, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sting in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face.

In Venus' temple, on the fides were seen Issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall.

SIGHT, n. f. [from sight, Saxon; sicht, Dutch.]
1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.
If bees go forth right to a place, they must needs have sight.

O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon or beggary, decrepit age!
Things invisible to mortal sight.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetic sight escape.
My eyes are somewhat dimly grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight.

2. Open view; a situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.
Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto sight,
And plac'd the flame before the king in sight.

Æneas cast his wond'ring eyes around,
And all the Tyrrhene army had in sight,
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right.
I met Brutus in a mortal sight;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight.

3. Act of seeing or beholding.
Nine things to sight required are;
Being not too fee, the light, the visible things,
Clear space and time, the form distinct to bring.

Mine eye purld him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him.
What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with steadfast sight,
Could view the surges mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep!

Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St.
Paul writ to, it is not strange that many things lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned in the letter understood at first sight.

4. Notice; knowledge.
It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sight but her own.

5. Eye; instrument of seeing.
From the depth of hell they lift their sight,
And at a distance see superior sight.

6. Aperture pervious to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye; as, the sights of a quadrant.
Their armed slaves in charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel.

7. Spectacle; show; thing wonderful to be seen.
Thus are my eyes still captive to one sight;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still.

Of fowls so lovely, that they sure did deem Them heavenly-born.

But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more.
Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bull is not burnt.

I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time.

SIG

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shaksp. R. III.
Scarce the dawning day began to spring,
As at a signal giv'n, the streets with clamours ring. Dryden.
SIGNAL, adj. [signal, French.] Eminent; memorable; remarkable.

He was esteemed more by the parliament, for the signal acts of cruelty committed upon the Irish. Clarendon.
The Thames frozen twice in one year, so as men to walk on it, is a very signal accident. Swift.

SIGNALITY, n. f. [from signal.] Quality of something remarkable or memorable.

Of the ways whereby they enquired and determined its signal, the first was natural, arising from physical causes. Brown.
It seems a signal in providence, in erecting your society in such a juncture of dangerous humours. Glau. Serj. Pref.

To SIGNALIZE, v. a. [signal, French.] To make eminent;
to make remarkable.

Many, who have endeavoured to signalize themselves by works of this nature, plainly discover that they are not acquainted with the most common systems of arts and sciences. Adison's Spectator.

Some one eminent spirit, having signalized his valour and fortune in defence of his country, or by the practice of popular arts at home, becomes to have great influence on the people. Swift.

SIGNALLY, adv. [from signal.] Eminently; remarkably;
memorably.

Persons signally and eminently obliged, yet missing of the utmost of their greedy designs in swallowing both gifts and giver too, instead of thanks for received kindnesses, have become themselves to barbarous threatenings. South's Sermons.

SIGNATION, n. f. [from signe, Latin.] Sign given; act of betokening.

A horridhoe Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signa- tion, he raised unto a lunar representation. Brown.
SIGNATURE, n. f. [signature, Fr. signatura, from signe, Lat.]

1. A sign or mark impressed upon any thing; a stamp; a mark.

The brain being well furnished with various traces, signa- tures, and images, will have a rich treasure always ready to be offered to the soul. Watts.

That natural and indelible signature of God, which human souls, in their first origin, are supposed to be stamped with,
we have no need of in disputes against atheism. Bentley.

Vulgar parents cannot stamp their race with signatures of such majestic grace. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A mark upon any matter, particularly upon plants, by which their nature or medicinal use is pointed out.

All bodies work by the communication of their nature, or by the impression and signatures of their motions: the diffusion of species visible, seemeth to participate more of the former,
and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Nat. History.

Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use. More against Atheism.

Seek out for plants, and signatures,
To quack of universal cures. Hudibras.

Herbs are described by marks and signatures, so far as to distinguish them from one another. Baker on Learning.

3. Proof; evidence.

The most despicable pieces of decayed nature are curiously wrought with eminent signatures of divine wisdom. Glau.

Some rely on certain marks and signatures of their election, and others on their belonging to some particular church or sect. Rogers's Sermons.

4. [Among printers.] Some letter or figure to distinguish different sheets.

SIGNATURIST, n. f. [from signature.] One who holds the doctrine of signatures.

Signaturists seldom omit what the ancients delivered, drawing into inference received distinctions. Brown.

SIGNET, n. f. [signette, French.] A seal commonly used for the seal-manual of a king.

I've been bold,
For that I knew it the most gen'ral way,
To them to use your signet and your name. Shaksp. Timon.

Here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

Give thy signet, bracelets, and staff. Gen. xxxviii. 18.

He delivered him his private signet. Kneller.

He knew my pleasure to discharge his hands:
Proof of my life my royal signet made,
Yet still he arm'd. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

The impression of a signet ring. Ayliffe's Paragon.

SIGNIFICANCE, n. f. [from significare.]

SIGNIFICANCY, n. f. [from significare.]

1. Power of signifying; meaning.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind by discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies. Holder.

If he declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action. Stilling.

SIG

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.

The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to majesty, the significance and found of words, not strained into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre. Dryden.

As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our Saviour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significance and force. Atter.

I have been admiring the wonderful significance of that word perfection, and what various interpretations it hath acquired. Swift.

3. Importance; moment; consequence.

How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumstance of less significance has been construed into an overt act of high treason? Adison.

SIGNIFICANT, adj. [significans, Fr. significans, Latin.]

1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.

Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loth to speak,
In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts. Shaksp. H. VI.

2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant,
but not efficient. Ralph.

3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.

Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments. Hobbes.

Common life is full of this kind of significant expressions, by knocking, beckoning, frowings, and pointing; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them. Holder on Speech.

The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor. Adison.

4. Important; momentous. A low word.

SIGNIFICANTLY, adv. [from significans.] With force of expression.

Christianity is known in Scripture by no name so signifi- cantly as by the simplicity of the Gospel. South's Sermons.

SIGNIFICATION, n. f. [significatio, French; significatio, Latin;
from signify.]

1. The act of making known by signs.

A lie is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another. South.

2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.

An adjective requireth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification. Academe.

Brute animals make divers motions to have several signifi- cations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten. Holder.

SIGNIFICATIVE, adj. [significativus, Fr. from signify.]

1. Betokening by an external sign.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and certainly delivered unto us. Brerewood.

2. Forcible; strongly expressive.

Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significative words; for whom we call grandfather, they call grandfather; whom we call great-grandfather, they call great-grandfather. Camden's Remains.

SIGNIFICATORY, n. f. [from signify.] That which signifies or betokens.

Here is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign. Taylor.

To SIGNIFY, v. a. [significo, French; significo, Latin.]

1. To declare by some token or sign.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,
Nor knew what signify'd the boding sign. Dryden.

But found the pow'r's displeas'd.
Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names; as the night, tartarus, and oceanus. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To mean; to express.

Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more! It is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing! Shakspere's Macbeth.

3. To import; to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifyes? or with much, little, or nothing.

Within the house your mistress is at hand. Shakspere.

To import, to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifyes? or with much, little, or nothing.

Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing; yet that is nothing to us.

What signifyes the splendor of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it? LeStrange.

He hath one way more, which although it signify little to men of sober reason, yet unhappily hits the suspicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose. Ellison.

If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, will signify nothing to the present societies in the world. Locke.

SIL

What signifyes the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie. Swift.

4. To make known.

I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shaksp. R. III.

He sent and signified it by his angel unto John. Rev. i. 1.

The government should signify to the protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied. Swift.

To SIGNIFY, v. n. To express meaning with force.

If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin. Ben. Jonson.

SIGNIFY, n. f. [significaria, Italian.] Lordship; dominion.

If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of signify,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand. Shaksp. R. III.

At that time
Through all the signifies it was the first,
And Prospero the prime duke. Shaksp. Tempest.

The earls, their titles and their signifies,
They must restore again. Daniel's Civil War.

My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,
Gain'd those high honours, princely signifies,
And proud prerogatives. West.

SIGNIFY, n. f. [signi and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.

He should share with them in the preserving
A shed or signify. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signify dappers, that now tis grown fulsome, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness. Dryden.

SIGNIFY, adv. The old word for sure, or surely. Spenfer.

SIGNIFY, n. f. [from sign.] Sureness; safety.

SIGNIFY, n. f. [silence, French; silentium, Latin.]

1. The state of holding peace.

Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel. Job xxix. 21.

I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim. ii. 12.

First to himself he inward silence broke.

2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.

I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence,
And discourse grow commendable in none but parrots. Shak.

3. Secrecy.

4. Silence; not noise.

Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease;
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Pope.

5. Not mention.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd,
And what most merits fame in silence bid. Milton.

SILENCE, interj. An authoritative restraint of speech.

Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.—
—Silence: one word more

Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. Shakspere.

To SILENCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To still; to oblige to hold peace.

We must suggest the people, that to's pow'r
He wou'd have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and disproportioned their freedoms. Shakspere.

The ambassador is silenc'd. Shakspere's Hen. VIII.

Silence that dreadful bell, it frights the life
From her propriety. Shakspere's Othello.

This passed as an oracle, and silenc'd those that moved the question. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenc'd, who being expos'd unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven. Brown's Vulgar Err.

This would silence all further opposition. Clarendon.

Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,
I could not silence my complaints. Denham.

These dying lovers, and their floating fons,
Suspend the fight and silence all our guns. Waller.

Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenc'd their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery. Rogers's Sermons.

If it please him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with difficulty, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him. Wake.

The thunderer spoke, nor durst the queen reply;
A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky. Pope's Iliad.

SILENT, adj. [silens, Latin.]

1. Not speaking; mute.

O my God, I cry in the day time, and in the night season I am not silent. Psalms xxii. 2.

Silent, and in face
Confounded long they sat as stricken mute. Milton.

Be not silent to me: left if thou be silent, I become like those that go down into the pit. Psalms xxviii. 1.

2. Not talkative; not loquacious.

Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought to much good as a word conceal'd. Notes on the Odyssey.

SIL

3. Still; having no noise.

Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl. Shak.

Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, save where silence yields
To the night-warbling bird. Milton.

4. Wanting efficacy. I think an Hebraism.

Second and instrumental causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become silent, virtueless and dead. Raleigh's History.

The fun to me is dark;
And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave. Milton.

5. Not mentioning.

This new created world, whereof in hell Fame is not silent. Milton.

SILENTLY, adv. [from silent.]

1. Without speech.

When with one three nations join to fight,
They silently confess that one more brave. Dryden.

For me they beg, each silently
Demands thy grace, and seems to watch thy eye. Dryden.

2. Without noise.

You to a certain victory are led;
Your men all arm'd stand silently within. Dryden.

3. Without mention.

The difficulties remain still, till he can show who is meant by right heir, in all those cases where the present possessor hath no son: this he silently passes over. Locke.

SILICIOUS, adj. [from silicium.] It should be therefore written silicious. Made of hair.

The silicious and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars, derive their institution from St. John and Elias. Brown.

SILICULOSE, adj. [silicula, Latin.] Husky; full of husks. Dict.

SILICINOSE, adj. [siliginosus, Latin.] Made of fine wheat. Dict.

SILICULOSA, n. f. [Latin.]

1. [With gold finers.] A carat of which six make a scruple.

2. [Silique, French, with botanists.] The seed-vessel, husk, cod, or shell of such plants as are of the pulse kind. Dict.

SILICOSE, adj. [from siligo, Latin.] Having a pod, or SILICOSE, capula.

All the tetrapetalous silicose plants are alkalescent. Arbut.

SILK, n. f. [seolc, Saxon.]

1. The thread of the worm that turns afterwards to a butterfly.

The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk;
And it was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Conserv'd of maiden's hearts. Shakspere's Othello.

2. The stuff made of the worms thread.

Let not the creaking of shoes, or rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman. Shakspere.

He caus'd the thure to be covered with Persian silk for him to tread upon. Kneller.

Without the worm, in Persian silks we shine. Waller.

SILKEN, adj. [from silk.]

1. Made of silk.

Men counsel and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakspere.

Now, will we revel it
With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings. Shakspere.

She weeps,
And words address'd seem tears dissolv'd,
Wetting the borders of her silken

SIL

SILK-WORM. n. f. [filk and worm.] The worm that spins silk. Grafthoppers eat up the green of whole countries, and silk-worms devour leaves swiftly. Bacon's Natural History.

A purer web the silk-worm never drew. Dryden.

SILKY. adj. [from filk.]
1. Made of silk.
2. Soft; pliant.

These kind of knaves, in plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends
Than twenty silky ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

SILL. n. f. [ryl, Sax. fuell, French; sulle, Dutch; fulgan, to found, Gothic.] The timber or stone at the foot of the door. The farmer's goole, Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill:
And hardly waddles forth. Swift.

SILLABUB. n. f. [This word has exercised the etymologists. Minsheu thinks it corrupted from suillingbubblu. Junius omits it. Henshaw, whom Skinner follows, deduces it from the Dutch fulle, a pipe, and buck, a paunch; because sillabubs are commonly drunk through a spout, out of a jug with a large belly. It seems more probably derived from esil, in old English vinegar, esil a boue, vinegar for the mouth, vinegar made pleasant.] Curds made by milking upon vinegar. Joan takes her neat rubb'd pail, and now
She trips to milk the fad-red cow;
Where, for some sturdy foot-ball swain,
Joan strokes a sillabub or twain. Wotton.

A feast,
By some rich farmer's wife and sister dress'd,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream,
Where all ideas huddling run for fast,
That sillabubs come first, and soups the last. King.

SILLY. adv. [from silly.] In a silly manner; simply; foolishly. I wonder, what thou and I Did, till we lov'd; were we not wean'd till then,
But suck'd on childish pleasures silly?
Or slumber'd we in the seven sleepers den? Donne.

We are caught as silly as the bird in the net. L'Estrange.
Do, do, look silly, good colonel; 'tis a decent melancholy after an absolute defeat. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

SILLINESS. n. f. [from silly.] Simplicity; weakness; harmless folly. The silliness of the person does not derogate from the dignity of his character. L'Estrange.

SILLY. adj. [selig, German. Skinner.]
1. Harmless; innocent; inoffensive; plain; artless.
2. Weak; helpless.

After long storms,
In dread of death and dangerous dismay,
With which my silly bark was tossed fore,
I do at length desery the happy shore. Spenser.

3. Foolish; witless.
Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Was that did their silly thoughts so busy keep. Milton.

The meanest subjects censure the actions of the greatest prince, the silly servants, of the wisest master. Temple.
I have no discontent at living here; besides what arises from a silly spirit of liberty, which I resolve to throw off. Swift.

Such parts of writings as are stupid or silly, false or mistaken, should become subjects of occasional criticism. Watts.

SILLYHOW. n. f. [Perhaps from ryly, happy, and poopy, the head.] The membrane that covers the head of the fetus. Great conceits are raised, of the membranous covering called the sillyhow, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SILT. n. f. Mud; slime. Several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor, near Thorny, in all probability covered by inundation, and the silt and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

SILVAN. adj. [from silva, Latin.] Woody; full of woods. Betwixt two rows of rocks, a silvan scene Appears above, and groves for ever green. Dryden.

SILVER. n. f. [ryolcey, Saxon; siluer, Dutch.]
1. Silver is a white and hard metal, next in weight to gold. Watts's Legist.

2. Any thing of soft splendour. Pallas, piteous of her plaintive cries,
In slumber clos'd her silver-streaming eyes. Pope.

3. Money made of silver. SILVER. adj.
1. Made of silver. Gen. xlv. 2.
Put my silver cup in the sack's mouth.
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-thatched queen for ever chaste. Milton.

The silver-thatched goddess of the place. Pope's Odyssey.

2. White like silver. Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair, Than Clarion. Spenser.

SIM

Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son.
The great in honour are not always wise,
Nor judgment under silver tresses lies. Shakespeare.

Others on silver-lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breast. Sandy.

3. Having a pale lustre. So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light. Shakespeare.

4. Soft of voice. This phrase is Italian, voce argentina.
From all their groves, which with the heavenly noises,
Of their sweet instruments were wont to found,
And th' hollow hills, from which their silver voices
Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with nought but rueful cries,
And yelling shrieks thrown up into the skies. Spenser.

It is my love that calls upon my name,
How silver sweet found lovers tongues by night,
Like softest musick to attending ears. Shakespeare.

To SILVER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover superficially with silver. There be fools alive, I wis, Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakespeare.

The splendour of silver is more pleasing to some eyes, than that of gold; as in cloth of silver, and silver'd rapiers. Bacon.
Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.
A gilder shew'd me a ring silver'd over with mercurial fumes, which he was then to refore to its native yellow. Boyl.

2. To adorn with mild lustre. Here retir'd the finking billows sleep,
And smiling calmness silver'd o'er the deep. Pope.

SILVERBEATER. n. f. [Silver and beat.] One that foliates silver. Silverbeaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyl.

SILVERLING. n. f. A thousand vines, at a thousand silverlings, shall be for briars and thorns. Isaiah vii. 23.

SILVERLY. adv. [from silver.] With the appearance of silver. Let me wipe off this honourable dew
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shakespeare.

SILVERSMITH. n. f. [Silver and smith.] One that works in silver. Demetrius a silversmith, made shrines for Diana. Acts xix.

SILVERTHISTLE. n. f. Plants. SILVERWEEP. n. f. [Canacordedron, Latin.] A plant. The leaves throughout the year are of a fine silver colour; it hath an apetalous flammable flower, which is surrounded by a number of long leaves immediately under the flower-cup, which consists of five narrow leaves; these are succeeded by cones, in shape like those of the larchtree; the seeds are each of them included in a square cell. Miller.

SILVERY. adj. [from silver.] Besprinkled with silver. A gritty stone, with small spangles of a white silvery tale in it. Woodward on Puffin.

Of all th' enamel'd race whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,
Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air. Duncod.

SILMAR. n. f. [Simar, French.] A woman's robe. The ladies dress'd in rich silmars were seen,
Of Florence tatin, flower'd with white and green. Dryden.

SIMILAR. adj. [similaire, French; from similis, Latin.]
1. Homogeneous; having one part like another. Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinnabar. Boyl.

2. Resembling; having resemblance. The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived. Hale's Hist. of Com. Law of En.

SIMILARITY. n. f. [from similar.] Likeness. The blood and chyle are intimately mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot.

SIMILE. n. f. [simile, Latin.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized. Their rhimes, Full of protest, of oath, and big compare, Want similes. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Lucentio slip'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master:
A good swift simile, but something curiish. Shakespeare.

SIM

In argument,
Similes are like songs in love,
They much describe; they nothing prove. Prior.

Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.

SIMILITUDE. n. f. [similitudo, French; similitudo, Latin.]
1. Likeness; resemblance. Similitude of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead. Bacon's Natural History.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the title of his own image and similitude. Ral.
Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitude, and let them rule. Milton.

Similitude to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitude of one face can be found in the other. Saunders's Sermons.

Fate some future bard shall join,
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile. Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education. Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryd.

SIMULACRUM. n. f. [See CIMETER.] A crooked or falcatated sword with a convex edge. To SIMULACRUM. v. n. [A word made probably from the found, but written by Skinner, simuler.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

Place a vessel in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simuler or boil a little. Boyle.

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simuler in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion. More's Antidote against Atheism.

SIMNEL. n. f. [simnellus, low Latin.] A kind of sweet bread or cake. SIMON'ACK. n. f. [simoniace, French; simoniacus, Latin.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church. If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniac, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial. Ayliffe.

SIMON'ICAL. adj. [from simoniace.] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment. Add to your criminals the simoniacal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spens.

SIMONY. n. f. [simonia, French; simonia, Latin.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment. One that by suggestion Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I with the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable. Walter's Life of Bishop Sanderson.

No simony nor simoniac is known; There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

To SIMPER. v. n. [from pymbelan, Saxon, to keep holiday, Skinner.] He derives simper from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over much idleness. Sidney.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simpering angels, palms and harps divine. Pope.

SIMPER. n. f. [from the verb.] Smile; generally a foolish smile. The wit at his elbow stared him in the face, with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Add.

Great Tibbald nods: the proud Parnassian fencer,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leech,
Mix on his look. Pope's Dunciad.

SIM

SIMPLE. adj. [simplex, Latin; simple, French.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless. Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simples sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Hooker.

They meet upon the way,
A simple husbandman in garments grey. Haberd's Tale.
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Race.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated. To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.

Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.

Among substances some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. Watts.

If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures: to every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them. Watts's Legist.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy. Thomson's Summer.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning. The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Prov. xv.

I would have you wife unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. Rom. xvi. 19.

Dick, simple odes too many show
My servile complaisance to Cloe. Prior.

SIMPLE. n. f. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb. Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill. Drayton's Q. of Cynthia.

Our softer nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies. Temple.

Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing, sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.

Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their powers I know,
And am the great physician call'd. Dryden.

To SIMPLE. v. n. To gather simples. As once the foaming boar he chas'd, Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simpling on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.

SIMPLESS. n. f. [simplex, French.] Simplicity; silliness; folly. An obsolete word. Their weeds been not so nightly were,
Such simpleless mought them shend,
They been yclad in purple and pall,
They reign and rule over all. Spenser's Pastoral.

I will hear that play: For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleless and duty tender it. Shakespeare.

Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simpleless of the elements. Digby.

SIMPLER. n. f. [from simple.] A simplist. An herbarist. SIMPLETON. n. f. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a trifler; a foolish fellow. A low word.

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down till he found him in a wood. L'Estrange.

Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribbles, or curious simpletons can make it. Pope.

SIMPLICITY. n. f. [simplicitas, Latin; simplicité, French.]
1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit. The sweet-minded Philoclea was in their degree of well doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney.

In

SIN

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance. Shakespeare.
Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity, neither milked nor much regarded, was created Duke. Haywood.
Suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Reigns her charge. Milton.
Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope.
Beauty is their own,

The feeling heart, simplicity of life,
And elegance and taste. Thompson's Summer.
The native elegance and simplicity of her manners, were accompanied with real benevolence of heart. Female Quixote.
2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancienter times. Hosker.
Those enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Plainness; not finery.
They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came,
and yet retaining part of its simplicity. Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.
Mandrakes afford a papaverous and unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, as is discoverable in their simplicity and mixture.
Brown's Vulg. Errors.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world, to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials. Burnet.

5. Weakness; silliness.
Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hosker.

How long ye simple ones will ye love simplicity? and fools hate knowledge? Prov. i. 22.

SIMPLIST. n. f. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.
A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplicists for amomum. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]
1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly; artlessly.
Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak;
Subverting worldly strong and worldly wife,
By simply meek. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Of itself; without addition.
This question about the changing of laws concerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hosker.

3. Merely; solely.
Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours both. Hosker.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Shakespeare.

To say, or to do ought with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milton.

4. Foolishly; sillily.
SIMULAR. n. f. [from simile, Latin.] One that counterfeits.
Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjurer, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakespeare's King Lear.

SIMULATION. n. f. [from simulatio, French; simulatio from similis, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fear-fulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Watson.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lie; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South's Sermons.

SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [from simultaneus, Latin.] Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville.

SIN. n. f. [from syn, Saxon.]
1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.
How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
4

SIN

A sin abolver, and my friend profess,
To mangle me with that word banishment. Shakespeare.
But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Tob. iii. 14.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.
Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him. Shakespeare.
Dishonest shame

Of nature's works: honour dishonourable!
Sin-bred! how have ye troubled all mankind? Milton.
Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land Should be let blood with such a boisterous hand? Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world. Watts's Legist.

Light from her thought, as summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Bacon.
3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.
Stand in awe and sin not. Psalms iv. 4.

unto death. 1 John v. 16.

2. To offend against right.
I am a man,
More sin'd against than sinning. Shakespeare.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sin against th' eternal cause. Pope's Essay on Man.

SINWORM. n. f. [from sin and worm.] A vile sinful creature.
I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of the sin-worm mould. Milton.

SINCE. adv. [formed by contraction from *sub*thence, or sub thence, from vide, Saxon.]
1. Because that.

Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Lake.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Glanville.

2. From the time that.
Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since
I was thine unto this day? Numb. xxii. 30.
He is the most improved mind since you saw him, that ever was, without shifting into a new body. Pope.

3. Ago; before this.
About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house.
Spies held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, fir, Half an hour since, brought my report. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty eighth of Henry the eighth. Darwin's Hist. of Ireland.
How many ages since has Virgil writ?

SINCE. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.
He since the morning hour set out from heav'n. Milton.

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients. Dryden.

SINCERE. adj. [from sincerus, Latin; sincere, French.]
1. Unhurt; uninjured.
He try'd a tough well chosen spear;
Th' inviolable body flood sincere. Dryden.

2. Pure; unmingled.
Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow:
A joy which never was sincere till now;
That which my conquest gave, I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect till I saw your eyes. Dryden.

The pleasures of sense bests taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.
This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence
I do know to be corrupt. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincere care could not prevent;
Foretold to lately what would come to pass,
When first this temper cross'd the gulf from hell. Milton.

SIN

In English I would have all Gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton on the Classics.

SINCERELY. adv. [from sincere.] Honestly; without hypocrisy;
with purity of heart.
The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who steadfastly and sincerely embrace it. Hooker.

That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty Does purpose honour to you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincerely intent in the pursuit of truth. Watts's Legist.

SINCERENESS. n. f. [from sincere, French; from sincere.]
SINCERITY.
1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.
Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost. Rogers.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.
In thy comfort cease to fear a foe;
For these the feels sincerity of woe. Pope's Odyssey.

SINON. n. f. [Latin.] A fold; a wrapper.
There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen. Bacon.

SINE. n. f. [from sinus, Latin.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch. Harris.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Claught's Phil. Princ.

SINSECURE. n. f. [from sin, without, and cura, care, Latin.] An

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
Wearied and galled with their necessities, Durst have thought it? Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

Our soul, whose country's heav'n and God her father,
Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That the returns home wiser than she went. Donne.

SINLESS, adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.
Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know,
What nearer might concern him, how this world
Of heav'n, and earth conspicuous, first began. Milton.

At that tasted fruit,
The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat? Milton.

Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou Satt'st unappal'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.

No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane, Obscure of the right. Dryden's Ovid.
Did God, indeed, instil on a sinless and unerring observance
Of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas! who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SINLESSNESS, n. f. [from sinless.] Exemption from sin.
We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to those,
The sinlessness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

SINNER, n. f. [from sin.]
1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.
Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

2. An offender; a criminal.
Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner; honest water, which ne'er left man? th' mire. Shakespeare's Timon.
Over the guilty then the fury shakes
The sounding whip, and brandishes her snakes,
And the pale sinner with her sisters treads. Dryden's En.

Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphick glow.
Whether the charmer sinner it or faint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

SINOFFERING, n. f. [from sin and offering.] An expiation or sacrifice for sin.
The flesh of the bullock shalt thou burn without the camp:

than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractus, or sinuations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

SINUOUS, adj. [from sinus, French, from sinus, Latin.] Bending in and out.
Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous. Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milt. Parad. Lost.
In the dissections of horses, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, where the gall is usually seated in quadruped, I discover an hollow, long, and membranous substance.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SINUS, n. f. [Latin.]
1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.
Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea:
whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinus's, might have had such an original.
Barnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Any fold or opening.
To SIP, v. a. [from sip, Saxon; sippen, Dutch.]

spite and rancour which prevails among her exasperated sister- hood, appears more amiable. Addison's Freeholder.

SISTERLY, adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.
After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. Shakespeare.

To SIT, v. n. preterite, I sat. [sittan, Gothick; yttean, Sax. sittan, Dutch.]
1. To rest upon the buttocks.
There were flays on each side of the sitting place. 1 Chron.
He sat for alms at the beautiful gate. Acts iii. 10.
Their wives do sit beside them carding wool. Mary's Virgil.
Aloft in awful state,
The godlike hero sat. Dryden.
On his imperial throne.

2. To perch.
All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or these,
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
What do I care if all the world me fail,
I will have a garment reach to my tail. Boord.
I will have a state of rest, or idleness.
3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.
Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Num.
Why sit we here each other viewing idly. Milton.

4. To be in any local position.
I should be still Plucking the grafts to know where sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Thole
Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milton.
The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. A. Phillips.

5. To rest as a weight or burthen.
Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shakespeare's When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us. Taylor.
To tofs and flings, and to be restless, only galls our fores, and makes the burden that is upon us fit more uneasy. Shakespeare's Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind. Dryden.
And horror, heavy fat on every mind.
Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us. Locke.

6. To fettle; to abide.
That this new comer shame,
There fit not and reproach us. Milton.
When Thetis blunth'd, in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown;
A sudden silence fate upon the sea,
And sweeping oars, with struggling, urg'd their way. Dryd.
He to the void advanc'd his pace,
Pale horror fat on each Arcadian face. Dryden.

7. To brood; to incubate.
As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jer. xvii. 11.
The egg laid and fever'd from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when the sitteth. Bacon's Natural History.
She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.
This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shakespeare's Heav'n knows,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it fate upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakespeare's Your preferring that to all other considerations does, in the eyes of all men, fit well upon you. Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.
One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome. Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.
As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he fit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he fit at great usury. Bacon.
Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity;
would the tenants fit easier in their rents than now? Swift.

11. To be fixed, as an assembly.
12. To be placed at the table.
Whether is greater he that sitteth at meat, or he that serv-eth? Luke xxii. 27.

13. To exercise authority.
The judgment shall fit, and take away his dominion. Dan.
Asses are ye that fit in judgment. Judges v. 10.

SIT, n. f. [Latin.] The dogstar.
SIROCCO, n. f. [Italian; siro, Latin.] The south-east or Syrian wind.
Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise, Sirocco and Libeccio. Milton.

SIRRAH, n. f. [from sir, bal Minshaw.] A compellation of reproach and insult.
Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakespeare's Tempest.
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
This bosom of thine. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. L'Estrange.

Guess how the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; no, begone. Prior.
SIRUP, n. f. [Arabic.] The juice of vegetables boiled with sugar.
Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,
Her words in sirup laid of sweetest breath, Sidney.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakespeare's Othello.
And first, behold this cordial jalap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant sirups mixt. Milton.

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plants; for if they be boiled into the consistence of a si- rup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will float upon the sides of the vessels. Arbutnot.
SWEET, adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.
Yet when there haps a honey fall,
We'll lick the sirups leaves:
And tell the bees that their's is gall. Drayton's Q. of Cynthia.

SIRUPY, adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.
Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature. Motimer.

Call all the great, the fair and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom, Ben. Johnson.

Some fit up late at winter-fires, and sit Their sharp-edg'd tools. May.

Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night. Lake.

To Sit. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.

Hardly the muse can fit the head-strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force. Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows fit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and fit him down and die. Shakespeare.

He came to visit us, and calling for a chair, sat him down, and we sat down with him. Bacon.

Thus he'd,

But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sat them down to weep. Milton.

SITE. n. f. [situs, Latin.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city self be strongly fortified,
Three sides by site it well defended has. Fairfax.

Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart. Bentley.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair,
Its site uncertain if on earth or air. Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture, or situation of a thing with respect to itself; but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy site, with head declin'd,
And love-dejected eyes. Thomson's Spring.

SITFAST. n. f. [sit and fast.]

A hard knob growing under the saddle. Farrar's Dict.

SITH. adv. [sith, Saxon.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intombed. Hooker.

Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy. Shakespeare.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence. Shakespeare.

SITHE. n. f. [sith, Saxon.] This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology. The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live registred upon our brazen tombs;
And then grace us in the disgrace of death:
When, spite of cormorant-devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall bate his sythe's keen edge;
And make us heirs of all eternity. Shakespeare.

Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged with a sythe, and an hour-glass. Peacham on Drawing.

There rude impetuous rage does storm and fret;
And there, as master of this murdering brood,
Swinging a huge sythe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath. Crahe.

The milk-maid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his sithe. Milton.

SIX

The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
But useless lances into sithes shall bend,
And the broad falchion in a plough-share end. Pope.

Grav'd o'er their seats the form of time was found,
His sythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound. Pope.

But, Stella, say, what evil tongue
Reports you are no longer young?
That time sits with his sythe to mow
Where erst fat Cupid with his bow.
Echo no more returns the cheerful sound
Of sharpening sithes. Thomson's Summer.

SITHENCE. adv. [Now contracted to since. See SINCE.] Since; in later times.

This over-running and wafting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sithence have afflicted that land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

SIX. n. f. [six, French.] Twice three; one more than five.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature can do her work with five. Dryden.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SIX and SEVEN. n. f. To be at six and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion.

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven. Shakespeare.

In 1588, there sat in the see of Rome a fierce thundering friar, that would set all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name. Bacon.

What blinder bargain e're was driv'n,
Or wager laid at six and seven. Hudibras.

John once, turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow, for his affairs went on at six and seven. Arbutnot.

The goddess would no longer wait;
But rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harnessed her doves and flew to heav'n. Swift.

SIXPENCE.

SIZ

SIXPENCE. n. f. [six and pence.] A coin; half a shilling: Where have you left the money that I gave you?
